King to Broadcast: Good Idea
Cat Among Mice

No need to summarize the King Edward VIII-Mrs. Simpson news, for high-spirited Americans want to read it all, as it spreads from column to column, from page to page; but one or two, really busy, might like part of the story boiled down.

All of London's printing presses could not pour out newspapers enough to supply the demand; no such demand for news since the armistice. The British cabinet and Empire forget all about war now, they have something interesting to discuss.

England's colonies, Canada, Australia, South Africa, are more excited about the proposed royal wedding than Stanley Baldwin himself, perhaps, because those colonies are a little more "middle-class" than the mother country.

The old London Times simply cannot "abide" the notion of the King marrying a divorced lady, with two former husbands living.

Yet Lord Astor, who owns the London Times, is himself married to a divorced lady and a very charming one, also an American.

"A cat may look at a king," but, apparently, the king must not do what the cat may do.

It was suggested here that King Edward, in an empire-wide radio broadcast, should tell his side of the story. Yesterday, Ferdinand Kuhn cabled the New York Times that the King plans such a broadcast.

Of the American lady in question, it may be said that if she marries the King and has children, they will not be afflicted with hemophilia and run the risk of bleeding to death, following a pin scratch. That will be an improvement on some other royal marriages.

Hysteria caused by the King's proposed marriage reminds you of the sudden appearance of a

'I'm in Hands of God,' Ill Pontiff Tells Cardinal

By ANDRUE BERDING

Vatican City, Dec. 5 (AP)—Pius XI, benign, 79-year-old "Pope of the Conciliation," was stricken today by slight paralysis in both legs, and some high prelates said he might never walk again.

His spirit brave, he spent his first day in bed since he assumed leadership of the Catholic church 14 years ago—completely resigned, officials said—to either becoming better or worse.

"I am in the hands of God," a high prelate quoted him as saying.

Physicians, hovering anxiously about the Holy Father, told him a slight bloodletting would relieve his blood pressure and spare him discomfort.

But the pontiff, able to move his limbs slightly but not to lift them, refused.

That the Pope's left leg was paralyzed was discovered this morning by his personal attendant when he began to assist His Holiness to arise.

The paralysis, said officials, later was found to have spread to the right leg.

For some weeks the Pope has been troubled by a heaviness of limb. But today's paralysis, it was stated authoritatively, was due primarily to a combination of high blood pressure and arteriosclerosis.

ENGAGEMENTS CANCELLED

Other parts of his body were weak.

For the time being, perhaps due to the Pope's disinclination to seek immediate medical relief, no physicians' bulletins were issued. All the pontiff's scheduled activities, as a matter of course, were cancelled.

However, early this afternoon an official notice stated the pontiff was suffering from a "slight local disturbance" due to his prodigious labor of the past few weeks.

Officials said the Vatican physician had prescribed "restful and quiet" conditions which the Holy Father accepted reluctantly.

OFFICIALS HOPEFUL

Nevertheless, he continued to sign letters from his bed and to transact some other business "with complete good cheer," well informed persons affirmed.

Official Vatican circles held out

London, Dec. 5—In the kingdom of the half mad that same prince whose difficulties over his father's illness I formerly chronicled succeeded to the throne on the death of that father, and almost at once found himself in difficulties with his cabinet and with the church.

Valence, France, Dec. 5 (INS) — Hurrying by automobile to the Riviera retreat of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Livingston Rogers of New York, Mrs. Wallis Simpson passed through Valence at 3:40 p. m. today. Valence is about 140 miles northwest of Cannes.

Sunningdale, Eng., Dec. 5 (INS)—With a lone figure in the rear seat, King Edward's personal limousine sped out of the grounds of Fort Belvedere at 10 o'clock this morning.

London, Dec. 5 (INS)—The executive committee of the British Labor party was summoned to meet at 2 p. m. Monday to record its attitude toward King Edward's marriage plans.

London, Dec. 5 (INS)—Prime Minister Baldwin will move a government resolution to permit discussion of official business in the House of Commons after the usual closing hour of 11 p. m. on Monday, it was announced today. This would enable night-long debate on the constitutional crisis if necessary.

Wally Says Her Fate Rests Solely In King's Hands

Royal Love's Dilemma

Mrs. Wallis Simpson, in her first authoritative statement, declares her whole future rests in King Edward's hands. "I'll rest awaiting his decision," she said. Her appeal to the King to sacrifice her and abandon his plans to wed her spurned by monarch.

Meanwhile, with Mrs. Simpson hiding in France, Edward at Belvedere and all England in a fever of intense excitement, the cabinet meets again, then hastily adjourns.

London, Dec. 5—In an exclusive statement to International News Service, transmitted while she was en route to sanctuary on the Riviera, Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson announced today she is leaving the entire decision regarding her future to King Edward.

It was the first declaration she has made to anyone since leaving England for French soil and, in fact, the only authorized statement she has issued at any time bearing on the romance that has rocked the world.

"Surely it must be realized," the American-

BRITISH MASSES RALLY TO SUPPORT OF MONARCH

Demonstration at Palace

'We Want Edward' Hundreds Chant

London, Dec. 5 (AP)—Chanting crowds, paced by blue-coated bobbies, roamed London today shouting themselves hoarse. In praise of King Edward and in denunciation of an obdurate government.

In loud choruses they proclaimed their loyalty for the democratic ruler with a self-nominated leader springing up at intervals to ask:

"Do we want Edward?"

The query came again:

"Do we want Baldwin (the Prime Minister)?"

"No-o-o-o!" came the reply, longdrawn and sour.

Sentiment throughout the city swelled as partisans chose their champions: King Edward, in love with American Mrs. Wallis Simpson, or Prime Minister Baldwin, head of a Constitutional Government determined to prevent the match.

POLICE ARE BUSY

Before Buckingham Palace, in Trafalgar square, through historic Haymarket to Piccadilly Circus, near official Downing street, down Whitehall, anywhere the ruler's supporters gathered the cry was always the same:

"Edward is right! Baldwin is wrong!"

Outside the royal palace, a group of elderly women took up a new chant: "Flog Baldwin! Down with the bishops!" When they were dispersed by police, they marched away singing "God Save the King."

WOMEN ENVIOUS

"Wide sections of the public still believe the cabinet opposes the King because he wishes to marry an American and a commoner," commented the laborite Herald.

"As long as they believe this, they will be indignant and justified champions of the King's right to marry outside the ranks of aristocracy or dynasty."

Said the News Chronicle:

"There unquestionably is a strong and growing desire among the public that the King should marry the woman of his choice as soon as she is free to marry him but that she should not become Queen of England.

"If such a solution could be arrived at, the public would heave a sigh of relief. There is no such thing in England at present as a morganatic marriage. But laws could be changed."

"I wonder how she caught him," said a housewife. "If it is good looks he wants, surely there are plenty of English factory girls who are pretty enough to fill the bill."

A girl who works in an office asserted, "We'll never stand for Mrs. Simpson. The King is the defender of the faith, head of the Church of England and number of other things. Oh, why couldn't she have kept out of all this. It's such a mess."

"In fact, it's just another demonstration to his subjects he's as human as they, which he's already demonstrated in various ways—by dancing wit hfactory girls, drinking tea with poor people, and other things."

"He is sitting behind the scenes twiddling his thumbs after letting the Bishop of Bradford open up the whole subject of the church's attitude on divorce."

"It's a bloody shame all this had to happen," said a charwoman, gloomily. "I am sorry for poor Queen Mary. I think she's been through enough without this. Mrs. Simpson? Never!"

ARGUMENT ON A BUS

"The iKng should marry into royalty and not a society woman," the conductor said flatly.

"At last we've got somebody at the top who's willing to get things done for the unemployed," replied a passenger. "The King's my choice no matter what he does. These government officials make me sick."

"What's the difference so long as I keep my job?" grinned a messenger boy.

"Sure let him marry her," a woman pedestrian agreed. "The church is always talking about the sanctity of marriage. There can't be any sanctity without affection and I think the King's really in love."

An American correspondent asked a British librarian her impressions.

"Americans wouldn't understand," she answered frigidly.

And then a barmaid, smiling:

"I know. You're going to ask what I think of Mrs. Simpson. What's she got that I ain't?"

Mattapan Safe Stolen

Wally's Name in London Times

London, Dec. 5 (INS)—The London Times broke down today and mentioned the name of the world's most discussed woman.

A news event that won three-inch-high headlines elsewhere was a two-inch item at the bottom of an obscure page in the Times.

Crisis Pondered In Dominions

Wellington, New Zealand, Dec. 5 (AP)—New Zealand's cabinet held a secret two-hour session today after Prime Minister Michael Savage conferred with Governor General Lord Galway.

The cabinet session was reported devoted to a discussion of the crisis between King Edward and his government.

Canberra, Australia, Dec. 5 (INS)—The Australian Parliament today was summoned to meet next Wednesday, probably in connection with the constitutional controversy in London.

FIRST BOOK OF SERIES READY

This is the day on which Boston Evening American readers may claim for themselves Volume Number 1 of the series of world masterpieces of literature this newspaper has had published.

That is to say, those who are able to call personally at the 16 authorized redemption stations may go home today with the first week's issue—James Fenimore Cooper's "THE LAST OF THE MOHICANS"—under their arms.

Those who want the book mailed, expressed, or delivered by messenger, also should get their requests into the mails quickly.

For those who are calling for the volume in person the following regulations obtain:

CONSECUTIVE NUMBERS

Make certain that you have six consecutively numbered coupons. The numbers should read 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. No substitutions are allowed.

For instance you CANNOT have two Number 2's in place of a missing Number 1. And that applies to any other digit in the series.

Should you have been unfortunate enough as to have missed one of the current week's series of coupons you will have to wait until next week, unless you are able to replace the missing coupon with one clipped from a back copy of the Boston Evening American.

Next item: Be sure and bring your 39-cent fee. This is a necessity, even if you have all of the coupons.

For those who are ordering by mail, the same rules apply except in the case of the fee.

READ YOUR COUPON

Naturally, it will cost more to parcel post your book. And the mail zone in which you live will determine how much.

Read your Mail Order coupon to determine exactly what the charge is. And DON'T send cash or stamps.

Also — this to mail orderers — please be patient.

The staff of the Book-a-Week editor will be working hard to satisfy you. The staff expects to be able to mail out volumes as fast as applications are received.

If you mail your order today, you should receive your copy of THE LAST OF THE MOHICANS in Monday's mail. Tuesday's, anyhow. But, of course, it depends on where you live.

Please wait a few days before making any complaint about delivery. Not that the Book-a-Week editor anticipates any, but it's just as well to be prepared.

Now then, as soon as you have dispatched your six coupons for your first volume of this series of twenty classics, bear in mind that you will want to start again next week.

Thackeray's VANITY FAIR is next week's offering.

This is the day. For those who live in Greater Boston and want to claim their books personally, all that is necessary is to bring your six consecutively numbered coupons and 39 cents to one of the redemption stations listed on the page of this paper in which the Book-a-Week advertisement appears.

For those who want to have the book mailed, expressed or delivered by messenger, it will be necessary to submit the six consecutively numbered coupons and whatever fee is required, according to where you live. (Read the coupons for details.)

Critical Situation Explained

King Can Win, Says English Bostonian

The following article was written especially for the Boston Evening American by an English-born Bostonian noted in educational circles. His name is omitted at his request.

By OXONIENSIS

The American public is finding it difficult to keep distinct the factors which make up the problem of the King's alleged plan to make Mrs. Simpson his queen-consort.

In the first place, it should be noted that, in English law, as it stands, there is no provision for any marriage of a secondary or morganatic kind.

In the second place, the legal situation is that no member of the royal family can marry legally except with the King's consent.

The consent of Parliament is not necessary, and the only persons actually excluded by the Act of Succession are Catholics. Obviously, there is here no bar to the King's marriage, for he can give his own consent.

It is widely stated in American papers, and hinted in some English ones, that the government could demand the King's abdication. This is absurd.

The King could, no doubt, abdicate if he chose and Parliament could accept the abdication. But no one could demand it by legal right as distinct from political pressure.

Cabinet Can Quit

If the Baldwin cabinet were unwilling to serve His Majesty, it could resign and His Majesty would then summon any one he liked to form a government.

The suggestion that no one would be willing to do so is sheer bluff, but, inasmuch as no new government would have the support of the Commons, it would doubtless advise the Crown to dissolve Parliament immediately and a general election would follow as a matter of established routine.

The question of an enforced abdication would not become actual unless the result of a general election was overwhelmingly in favor of the Archbishop of Canterbury and Mr. Baldwin and was definitely a popular verdict against the King.

If this happened the King might feel inclined to consider abdication rather than allow the whole machinery of government to stop. But it has not happened yet.

The ecclesiastical position is more complex. The King—not the Archbishop of Canterbury—is the supreme head of the Church of England.

According to the formula printed in the English Book of Common Prayer the Monarch, in 1562, declared, and the bishops accepted, the declaration that "Being by God's Ordinance according to our just title, Defender of the Faith and Supreme Governour of the Church within our Dominions, we, etc." and similarly the xxxviith Article, which is signed by all the clergy of the established Church, states that the "King's majesty hath the chief power in this realm of England . . . unto whom the chief government of all Estates of the realm, whether they be Ecclesiastical or Civil, in all cases doth appertain."

Clergy Resentful

It is, of course, true that a majority of the present clergy in England call themselves Anglo-Catholics and resent the fact that they are actually under the authority of the King in Parliament. They have established many illegal practices and endeavor to enforce a law of marriage other than the law of the land.

A working compromise has been reached, however, which enables the clergy to refuse to perform the marriage ceremony in the case of divorced persons.

But they cannot refuse the use of their churches and the marriage of such persons is perfectly legal.

Therefore, unless the King's nerve breaks, or unless law and precedent be disregarded, a speedy general election is much more likely than anything else.

But, of course, no one knows what ideas the archbishop and the prime minister have in reserve.

One factor, however, should be watched closely. Mr. Baldwin has the Conservative papers behind him, and "got a jump" on the rest of the press.

There are now signs that the Rothermere and Beaverbrook press may go Royalist.

Neither of these peers loves Mr. Baldwin and neither is warmly attached to Anglo-Catholic principles. They would not wish to get rid of the King in order to strengthen either Baldwin or the archbishop.

Moreover, there is a growing suspicion that many "big people" are more concerned with King Edward's sympathy with the working class than with his matrimonial intentions. After all, Mr. Baldwin won the last election by reason of popular sympathy with Ethiopia, without which a Labor majority might easily have been returned.

What of the King's visit to Wales?

Dobie, Murdock Out of Danger

Murdock, the more seriously injured of the two in the auto crash last Tuesday on Beacon street, has remarkable recuperative powers, and to this Dr. Thomas Wickham, Back Bay surgeon, attributes his improvement.

Because of Dobie's age, Dr. Wickham believes his recovery will be a longer pull, but announced that both men were well out of danger.

becoming a family man, he needed a gentle soothing sort of wife, because his nerves were very sensitive and the conversation of his ministers was often very irritating.

As it happened he knew a lady who had just those qualities. Her name, as well as I can remember it, was Mrs. Daisy Bell; and she was an American who had been married twice before and was therefore likely to make an excellent wife for a king who had never been married at all.

Natural and Proper

All this seemed natural and proper; but in the country of the half mad you never could count on anything going off quietly.

The government, for instance, would let whole districts fall into ruin and destitution without turning a hair, and then declare that the end of the world was at hand because some foreign dictator had said bluntly that there are milestones on the Dover road.

And so the King was not surprised when he was suddenly told one day at noon or thereabouts, that the archbishop and the prime minister had called and insisted on seeing him at once.

The King, having spent the morning with Mrs. Bell, was in a good humor; so he had them up and offered them cocktails and cigars.

But they not only refused this refreshment quite sternly, but exhibited such signs of acute mental disturbance that he had to ask them, with some concern, what was the matter.

"How can you ask us, sir?" cried the Prime Minister, "the newspapers are full of it. There are photographs. We are not spared even the lady's little dog. What is Your Majesty going to do about it?"

"Nothing out of the regular course," said the King. "I shall be crowned in May. And in June I shall marry Daisy."

"Impossible," the Prime Minister almost shrieked. "Madness."

"Out of the question," said the Archbishop, whose pulpit voice was a triumph of clerical art. "You cannot marry this woman."

"I had rather you called her Mrs. Bell," said the King. "Or Daisy, if you prefer it."

Call Her Daisy

"If I were to officiate at your proposed marriage I should have to speak of her as this woman," said the Archbishop. What is good enough for her in the House of God is good enough for her here. But I shall refuse to officiate."

"And I shall resign," said the Prime Minister.

"How awful," said the King. "Would it be too brutal of me to remind you that there are others. Sandy MacClossie would form a King's party for me in a week. You may have to resign in any case long before the coronation."

"Your taunt does not apply to me," said the Archbishop. "The church will not solemnize an unconstitutional marriage."

"That will get me out of the very grave difficulty," said the King. "Religious matters are not so simple for me as they were for William the Conqueror of whose death some of you don't seem to have yet heard.

"William had only a handful of adventurers to consider, all Christians, and Christians of one sort.

"I have to consider four hundred and ninety-five millions—call it five hundred—of my subjects. Only 11 per cent of them are Christians; and even that tiny minority is so divided into sects that I cannot say a word about religion without hurting somebody's feelings.

Many Religions

"As it is, my Protestant succession is an insult to the Pope and his church. If I get married in a church, especially one with a steeple on it, I shall offend the Quakers. If I profess the 39 articles of the Church of England I shall bind myself to hold most of my loving subjects as accursed and oblige hundreds of millions of them to regard me as an enemy of their God.

"Now though all the religious stuff in the coronation business is obsolete and offensive I cannot alter it; that is your affair. But I can get legally married without offending the religious feelings of a single soul in my Empire.

"I shall be married civilly by the district registrar. What have you to say to that?"

"It is unheard of and outrageous," said the archbishop. "But it would certainly get me out of a very difficult situation."

"Archbishop," cried the prime minister, "are you deserting me?"

"I cannot on the spur of the moment find the reply to His Majesty's very unexpected move," said the archbishop. "You had better take up the constitutional point while I consider it."

"It is impossible for Your Majesty to defy the constitution. Parliament is too powerful," said the prime minister.

To Face Election

"It has that reputation as long as it does nothing," said the King. "However, I am as devoted to the constitution as you are. Only understand; if you push me to a general election to ascertain the wishes of my people on this question I am quite ready to face that extremity.

"You would get a glorious licking. I have the people behind me. Your very mistaken ballyhoo in the press has not imposed on me."

"But there is no question of a general election," said the prime minister. "Are you prepared to act by the advice of your ministers or are you not? That is the simple issue between us."

"Well, what is your advice?" said the King. "Whom do you advise me to marry? I have made my choice. Now make yours. You cannot talk about marriage in the air—in the abstract. Come down to tin tacks. Name your lady."

"But the Cabinet has not considered that. You are not playing the game, sir," said the Prime Minister.

"You mean that I am beating you at it," said the King. "I mean to. I thought I should."

"But I cannot choose a wife for you, can I?" said the Prime Minister.

No Wife, No Advice

"Then you cannot advise me on the subject," said the King. "And if you cannot advise me I cannot act by your advice."

"This seems to me to be a quibble," said the Prime Minister. "I should never have expected it from Your Majesty. You know very well what I mean. Somebody of royal stock. Not American."

"At last we have something definite," said the King. "The Prime Minister of England publicly classes Americans as untouchables. You insult the nation on whose friendship and kinship the existence of my empire in the east finally depends. All my wisest political friends regard the marriage of a British King with an American lady as a master stroke of policy."

"I should not have said that. "It was a slip of the tongue," said the Prime Minister.

"Very well, we will wash that out," said the King. "But you still want a bride of royal stock. You are dreaming of a 17th century dynastic marriage.

In 20th Century

"I, the King of England and Emperor of Britain, am to go abegging through Europe for some cousin, five or six times removed, of a dethroned down-and-out Bourbon, or Hapsburg, or Hohenzollern, or Romanoff, about whom nobody in this country or anywhere else cares one single dump.

"I shall do nothing so unpopular and so silly. If you are still living in the seventeenth century I am living in the twentieth.

"I am living in a world of republics, of mighty powers governed by ex-house painters, stone masons, promoted rank soldiers, sons of operators in boot factories. Am I to marry one of their daughters?

"Choose my father-in-law for yourself. There is the Shah of Persia. There is Effendi Whataturk. There is Signor Bombardone. There is Herr Battler. There is the Steel King of Russia. That is the royal stock of today.

"I wonder would any of these great rulers allow a relative of his to marry an old-fashioned king! I doubt it.

"I tell you there is not a royal house left in Europe today which I could marry into without weakening England's position. And if you don't know that you don't know anything."

"Entirely Mad"

"You seem to me to be entirely mad," said the prime minister.

"To a little London clique some two or three centuries behind the times I no doubt seem so. The modern world knows better. However, we need not argue about that. Name your lady," asked the King.

"I cannot think of anybody at the moment, though there must be lots available. Can you suggest anyone, archbishop?"

"No; the unexpectedness of the demand leaves my mind a blank," said the archbishop. "I think we had better discuss the possibility of an abdication."

"Yes, yes," said the prime minister, "Your Majesty must abdicate. That will settle the whole question and get us out of all your difficulties."

"My sense of public duty, to which your friends appeal so movingly, will hardly allow me to desert my post without the smallest excuse for such an act," said the King.

"Your throne will be shaken to its foundations," said the archbishop.

"That is my look-out," said the King, "as I happen to be sitting on it. But what will happen to the foundations of the church if it tries to force me to contract a loveless marriage and to live in adultery with the woman I really love?"

"You need not do that," said the Archbishop.

"We'd Better Go"

"You know that I will," said the King, "if I listen to your counsel. Dare you persist in it?"

"I really think, P. M., that we had better go," said the Archbishop. "If I were superstitious I should be tempted to believe that the devil is putting all these arguments into His Majesty's head. They are unanswerable, and yet they are so entirely off the track of English educated thought that they really do not belong to your world and mine."

"Besides," said the King, rising as his two visitors rose, "my brother, who would succeed me, might strongly object. And he is married to a home-grown consort, who is more popular than any foreign ex-princess could be. And he would never be the real thing as long as I was in the offing. You would have to cut my head off. You can't tomfool with the throne; you must either abolish it or respect it."

"You have said enough, sir," said the Prime Minister. "Spare me any more."

"Stay for lunch, both of you. Daisy will be there. Or must I make it a command?"

Archbishop Hungry

"It is past my lunch hour; and I am very hungry," said the Archbishop. "If it is a command, I shall not demur."

As they went downstairs to the dining room the King whispered to the stricken Prime Minister:

"I warn you, my dear Goldwyn, that if you take up my challenge and name your lady, her photograph shall appear in all the papers next day with Daisy's beside it. Daisy and her little dog."

The Prime Minister shook his head sadly; and so they went into lunch together.

RIVIERA GOAL IN FLIGHT

BULLETIN

Paris, Dec. 5 (INS)—The Surete General—France's Scotland Yard—today confirmed that Mrs. Wallis Simpson is headed for the French Riviera. Leaving Blois early this morning, she passed through Roane at 7:30 and Saint Etienne at 9 a. m. without stopping, and then headed down the Rhone river valley.

By ROBERT CHASSEUIL
International News Service Staff Correspondent

Cannes, France, Dec. 5—While the Riviera hummed with rumors that King Edward might fly to Cannes today, Mrs. Wallis Simpson dashed down the picturesque Rhone river valley by motor to seek tranquility in the villa of American friends

Due on the blue Mediterranean's shores around mid-afternoon, according to local police, Mrs Simpson will be the guest here of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Livingston Rogers of New York, friend of both King Edward and Mrs. Simpson.

Sudden dispatch of a special force of police to the Cannes airport after the local police commissioner had talked over the telephone with the French foreign office in Paris was the sole basis of the rumors that the King might fly down to see Mrs. Simpson.

Police Commissioner Jules Rossi, disavowing any knowledge of the reports that the King might come to Cannes, insisted that sending the police to the airport was only a "routine" action.

Rossi confirmed, however, that police preparations, under instructions from the Surete Generale and the foreign office, had been made to receive Mrs. Simpson today.

Horde of Scribes

Whisking southward after a wild ride from England, Mrs. Simpson was robbed of the haven she sought here almost at the outset, when 30 carloads of reporters and cameramen picked up her train at Blois, where she stopped for a few hours' sleepless rest.

She dodged the pursuit for a time when a sudden spurt from the antique Hotel de France at Blois at 3:50 a. m. threw them off the scent, but in a few hours her progress down the Rhone resembled a fast-moving parade.

Her big American-made limousine, bearing the royal license numbers, droned through Ranne at 7:30 and Saint-Etienne at 9 a. m. without stopping, and rolled along southward rinse behind the Surete Generale escort, towards Valence and Avignon. At some point before Marseilles she will turn westward.

Mrs. Simpson and her escorts made a 45-minute halt at Moulins for breakfast. She sat at a table in the public dining room of the hotel for 45 minutes with her companions.

Police in every town and hamlet along the line were ordered to prepare easy passage for Mrs. Simpson and to try to break up the pursuit.

In her own car, besides the chauffeur, were two Scotland Yard detectives, giving her the protection of the two most famous police organizations in Europe.

A Scotland Yard detective also accompanied her baggage, a dozen suitcases and hat boxes and two trunks, which came to Cannes by train and were taken to the Rogers villa.

Mr. and Mrs. Rogers who were guests with Mrs. Simpson aboard the King's chartered yacht the Nahlin, on a Mediterranean cruise last summer, have a charming villa near the shore—"Lou Viei," on the Chemin de Vallauris.

Surrounded by expensive gardens and patrolled by special guards, the villa will no doubt finally afford her the seclusion she seeks until the storm over King Edward's intentions to marry her subsides in England.

Silently sweeping away from Fort Belvedere after a poignant farewell to King Edward, the world's most talked-about woman started a race by road and ship through daylight and darkness, across two countries, a sad strained figure like some Dumas heroine, fleeing from vague doubts and fears and leaving behind the one she loves most in the world.

She took the less-frequented cross-channel route from New Haven to Dieppe, instead of the shorter, faster ferry from Dover to Calais, and rolled through Normandy's apple orchards under a dull sky.

Fog, however, forced her back, and she took a suite at the old Hotel de France—the very room in which the Duke de Guise, pretender to the French throne, slept before his assassination four centuries ago.

Unable to Sleep

In that ghostly atmosphere, across the Place Victor Hugo from the ancient Fortress Donjon, she restlessly tossed, fully clothed and unable to sleep for four hours.

Twice, however, she telephoned to King Edward at Fort Belvedere, once at some stopping place along the road, and again from Blois.

Smoking cigarette after cigarette, Mrs. Simpson soon heard the increasing rumble of cars in the Place Victor Hugo and the voices of men she learned were reporters.

Quickly she gave her orders, and in a few minutes, a brawny Scotland Yard detective on either side, she dashed out the door, into her car, and sped over obscure highways southward.

"Mrs. Simpson was obviously under a severe nervous strain," the hotel clerk said. "She hardly ate her supper and appeared completely exhausted."

Wally's Luggage Arrives in Cannes

Cannes, France, Dec. 5 (AP)—Mrs. Simpson's luggage—five valises and eight large trunks initialed "W. W. S."—arrived here today and were sent to the villa of Mr. and Mrs. Herman L. Rogers, socially prominent New Yorkers.

There has been speculation Mrs. Simpson would find refuge from the turmoil of her romance with King Edward VIII at the Rogers' 16-rooms villa, Lou Viei, on a hill outside the city.

The residence was surrounded by plainclothesmen and Mrs. Rogers, a frequent member of parties given by Mrs. Simpson and King Edward was living elsewhere in the city. She refused to say whether the hilltop home was being prepared for Mrs. Simpson.

Rogers met the train on which the baggage arrived in Cannes. He was accompanied by a detective from Scotland Yard.

"I don't know anything about Mrs. Simpson," Rogers said.

Rogers Long King, Wally Friends

New York, Dec. 5 (AP)—Mr. and Mrs. Herman L. Rogers, to whose villa in Cannes Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson has sent her luggage, have been friends of Mrs. Simpson for many years.

Through her they met King Edward, then Prince of Wales, and Rogers now is one of the king's favorite partners at squash rackets, sailing and golf.

Mr. and Mrs. Rogers are wealthy American who have spent most of their time in recent years on the Riviera. They are listed in the New York Social Register.

Mrs. Rogers is the former Katherine Moore of New York, and Rogers is a Yale graduate. His brother, Edward Rogers, lives on Long Island.

Friends describe Mr. and Mrs. Rogers as "very quiet and conservative." Both are about the age of Mrs. Simpson and the King.

Mrs. Rogers, who is slender and blue-eyed, with light brown hair, dresses with smart simplicity, like Mrs. Simpson.

Mrs. Rogers often entertains on the patio, which is lighted at night by Chinese lanterns.

HER HEART ALL KING'S, "WHATEVER HAPPENS"

(Picture from International News Photograph Service)

Whatever decision King Edward VIII of England makes in this great crisis of their romance, he can count on her love and acquiescent loyalty. This was Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson's final promise to her royal sweetheart. The heartbreak which looms for her now as she goes into voluntary exile in France seems haunting her shadowed eyes in this most recent of her photographs, just received from England, she has begged the King to think first of himself and sacrifice her, if necessary, to his high position and great responsibilities.

Wally in Her French Flight

WALLY DINES, CALLS LONDON

Enters Vienne Cafe Through Back Door To Wine Cellar

Vienne, France, Dec. 5 (AP)—Mrs. Wallis Simpson, on her way to a southern France haven from Great Britain's crown tempest, lunched today at a Vienne restaurant and put through a telephone call which, the operator said, went direct to Buckingham Palace.

Mrs. Simpson, wearing the same rust suit in which she reached Rouen early yesterday, had luncheon with her party in a private dining room of one of the best-known restaurants in France—the Cafe de la Pyramide—after entering the place through the door of the wine cellar.

Her British chauffeur said neither he nor his passengers had slept or eaten since they left Blois at 3 a. m. Te "believed" Mrs. Simpson was going to the Riviera.

Friends Aid

In the back of the Simpson car was a French newspaper displaying the blazing headline: "The king's abdication seems certain."

The chauffeur asserted the party had reached Vienne at 1 p. m. (8 a. m. Eastern standard time) and had driven to a street behind the restaurant, where "friends" were waiting to open the wine cellar door.

Mrs. Simpson and her secretary passed through the door, through the cellars and up the backstairs of the restaurant to the upper floor dining room.

The chauffeur then drove the car around to a side entrance of the restaurant, where he partook of a hot plate sent out from the kitchens.

Preceded by a detective, the King's American friend emerged from the backstairs route leading through the wine cellar, rushed across the sidewalk and entered the car.

Wally Tired

It was driven southward at a terrific speed.

Madame Pointe, wife of the restaurant proprietor, said Mrs. Simpson had told her she was "very tired and very nervous."

Immediately on her arrival, she was taken to the proprietor's apartment above the main restaurant to make her toilette; thence to the private dining room.

Attendants said she merely picked at the pate de foie gras, shrimp salad, and a bird, served with white wine.

"But," said Mme. Pointe, "she appeared oh, so much more composed after she had telephoned the palace in London."

Crisis Finds King In Fine Health, Doctor Says

London, Dec. 5 (AP)—Lord Dawson of Penn, the royal physician, today said King Edward was in "excellent health."

He an dother intimates of the trouble-beset sovereign indicated Edward's tremendous reserve of physical and mental energy had proved an invaluable ally in his struggle with the hostile cabinet over his determination to marry Mrs. Walli Simpson.

In recent days the world's most physically fit King has been lucky to grab three or four hours' sleep out of the twenty-four.

He long has been known as the "hard rock" of European royalty—both mentally and physically.

For years it has been his custom to take setting-up exercises on getting out of bed each morning; then jump on the scales.

If the scales showed an ounce over 142 pounds, he dashed for the squash court and a strenuous workout.

He long has been noted for his penchant off spending 12 hours at the business of state; then dropping in at a convenient cafe for three or four hours of dancing.

A few months ago—before Mrs. Simpson obtained her divorce nisi—he and the lady entered a cabaret after midnight and danced for 15 minutes without a break.

There was every indication, in fact, that the monarch and his Belveder household were astir early today, although the king passed up his usual morning walk.

At 10 a. m., the royal motor sped to London, returning after 3 p. m. It was believed to have contained only a member of Edward's entourage.

When Happiness Was Theirs

U. S. HAD 'WALLY CASE'

Woman Wrecked Cabinet, Careers

Washington, Dec. 5 (AP)—England's crisis over King Edward's proposal to marry Mrs. Wallis Simpson recalls that Washington, too, was once shaken to its political foundations by a row over a woman.

She was Peggy O'Neale. A little more than a century ago, Peggy, a tavern keeper's daughter who had become the wife of Secretary of War John H. Eaton, was the center of a storm that wrecked the cabinet of Andrew Jackson.

The trouble also goaded one man to try to kill another, blasted the political hopes of John C. Calhoun and helped start Martin Van Buren on the road to the presidency.

Peggy, observers of the day recorded, was a beautiful and vivacious woman. At 17 she married John B. Timberlake, a purser in the Navy. Five years later he committed suicide, and in 1829 Mrs. Timberlake married Senator Eaton of Tennessee, who had lived at her father's Washington tavern.

Jackson also had lived at the tavern and made Peggy's acquaintance. The trouble began when Jackson became President and appointed Eaton to his cabinet.

Rumors were spread about Peggy. Cabinet wives looked down their noses at her as a social inferior. A movement to ostracize her began.

Snubbed and embarrassed, the proud Peggy refused to be cowed. Jackson, whose chivalry dominated his political sagacity, insisted that she be accepted in society.

Eaton challenged former Secretary of the Treasury Ingham to a duel, and when he refused to fight Peggy encouraged her husband to kill him. Ingham, however, was not to be found.

The situation finally grew so acute that Jackson called in the Cabinet and made it plain that he would not yield. Neither would the majority of the Cabinet. Jackson then forced most of the members out.

The incident wrecked the friendship between Jackson and his Vice-President, John C. Calhoun, and helped Jackson's support for Van Buren as the next President. Van Buren had been in the pro-Peggy camp.

VICTORS in King Test NAMED

THREE AWARDS OF $3 MADE

By ANN MARSTERS

We Americans certainly have some varied opinions on that royal romance that's going on just across the sea.

The Boston Evening American is paying $3.00 for each contribution printed—and already we have received many interesting ideas on what King Edward should do about the lady of his heart, Mrs. Wallis Simpson. And there is a quantity of suggestions on what Mrs. Simpson should do about the King.

So send in your opinions to the Royal Romance Editor, Boston Evening American. If your letter is printed, you will receive $3.00.

TODAY'S WINNERS

"If I were Mrs. Wally Simpson, I wouldn't marry the King because I just couldn't ask the man I loved to forget his country and his people.

"Maybe my love for him could make his life happy for a time, but the day would come when he would want to return to his country. But his people, remembering that he had forsaken them for love of a woman, might not want him back. So I would step aside and leave him to his country. And I would have the beautiful memory that a king would have given up everything for me."

"If I were King Edward, I would marry Wally Simpson regardless of anyone or anything. The throne would never bring him any happiness if he kept it at the loss of the woman he loves. It would be a constant reminder of all he had lost, and he would regret it to the end of his days.

"ONLY HUMAN"

"Once a man falls in love he is never satisfied until he makes his loved one his wife, and I do not believe that King Edward is any exception.

"He is really only a human being the same as the rest of us."

"King Edward should not marry Mrs. Simpson. When a king becomes ruler of such a vast empire, his life automatically belongs to his people and his country. Therefore, he should maintain his throne at all costs, even if it means giving up the woman he loves. Under no conditions should he allow a woman to interfere with his ruling.

"He should not think of himself in this matter. He is a king, and should consider the good and welfare of his country. If he abdicates, he will pay dearly when he realizes, in later years, what it means to be 'without a country.'"

More prize winners will be printed daily in the Boston Evening American. So send in your opinions—and perhaps you'll be a winner.

"Since yesterday I have been followed everywhere.

PLEADS WITH KING IN VAIN

Mrs. Simpson's historic message, confirming her entire willingness to abide by whatever decision King Edward deems proper even though it should mean sacrifice of their plans for wedded happiness, was transmitted while she was on her way to Cannes to take up temporary residence at the Villa Lou Viei, residence of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Livingston Rogers of New York.

Before she departed, Mrs. Simpson had a touching farewell meeting with the King at Fort Belvedere in which she herself urged him to abandon the marriage plans if he thought this the best course to pursue for his own sake and that of his empire.

King Edward today was still in silent seclusion at his country estate, Fort Belvedere, still determined to marry Mrs. Simpson but under increasing pressure from government, church and nobles, either to abandon the marriage to abdicate his throne.

He was in touch with Mrs. Simpson by telephone on several occasions during her dramatic automobile trip through France to the quiet and seclusion of the Cote d'Azur.

Won't Give Her Up

Mrs. Simpson herself telephoned Mrs. Rogers at 2 p. m. today from Moulins, France, stating she hoped to reach the villa by 11 o'clock tonight or if not the first thing tomorrow morning.

King Edward himself telephoned Mrs. Rogers shortly afternoon today, inquiring after the arrangements made for Mrs. Simpson's comfort.

The statement from Mrs. Simpson today was the only authoritative authentic declaration she has made regarding her future with King Edward.

Countless newspaper attempts were made to interview her on the romance, but she has always maintained a dignified silence, declining to add fuel to the fires of gossip or make any statement which might in any way embarrass the King.

Mrs. Simpson, in her ardent plea for King Edward to abandon his plans to marry her, asked him to sacrifice their hope for wedded life in the interests of himself and his empire.

But, as stated, King Edward refused, saying he intended to fight first.

(In a dramatic scene which occurred shortly before Mrs. Simpson went to France an intimate woman friend of both principals disclosed today, Edward showed kingly courage and determination to battle for the beautiful American woman he loves so desperately.

Don't Leave Me'

He asked her to promise not to do anything rash—such as leaving him or going away "for good."

Mrs. Simpson replied that she would stick to him as long as he felt he needed her and loved her, no matter what happens, whether the marriage was possible or not.

Edward, the friend related, went to Mrs. Simpson with the information that Premier Baldwin refused to accede to the King's request to introduce legislation providing a new succession act, and that the imperial dominions would support Baldwin's refusal to do so.

Distraught over the terrific opposition of church and state, and the implied demands in opposition quarters that Edward must abdicate if he marries her, Mrs. Simpson poignantly pleaded with the King to give up the idea.

Pleads: 'Save Empire'

She told him they must not be so selfish as to let their love endanger his position as King Emperor or to imperil the future of the British Empire.

There was no reason why their marriage should endanger his position as King, Edward replied, and the empire would be protected by his proposed act of succession, by which their possible children would not be in line for the throne.

King Edward called Baldwin "obstinate," but conceded that the premier was being pressed by the "old guard."

If the situation were presented to them in a fair light, Edward added, he believed the dominions would not object.

Mrs. Simpson nevertheless repeated her fear that the King's position would be imperilled, and reiterated her belief that they should abandon the idea of marriage.

Again Edward replied that he intended to fight first.

King Still Defiant; Cabinet Gloomy, Weary

London, Dec. 5 (AP)—King Edward, continuing in his stubborn defiance to the British cabinet, is determined to marry Mrs. Wallis Simpson, the highest sources asserted today.

The ruler has not yielded to the government's ultimatum that he renounce formally and unconditionally—the American woman who is the choice of his heart.

They will convene to discuss the tense situation again at 10:30 a. m. Monday (5:30 a. m. E. S. T.)

During the interval, they had been instructed to "stand by" and remain in or near London.

The government has been promised the King's final word within 48 hours, it was understood.

Twenty ministers attended the session of the cabinet. As some were leaving the Baldwin residence, automobiles bearing banners urging the King not to surrender appeared in nearby streets.

"Confound the clerics," said one of the signs on the cars. "A free country and a free king!" declared another.

The popular movement, which reached its climax in widespread demonstrations in the King's favor throughout London, was reported spreading even among conservative members of Parliament.

At noon the whole situation shaped up like this:

1—Official opposition to the King is of the most formidable character. Official and party headquarters say opinion is hardening in conservative ranks that the Sovereign will have to choose abdication as an escape from his present dilemma.

2—British opinion, as reflected by the press and on the streets, supports and sympathizes with the King on the personal problem he faces.

3—Parliament undoubtedly is lined up strongly behind Baldwin on the constitutional aspects of the fight. Whether the constitutional problems involved in the possibility of the King's marriage to Mrs. Simpson are as serious as Baldwin interpreted them may not be known until the whole issue is decided. Winston Churchill is actively supporting the King's position, but few members of Parliament believe he could command the necessary support in Commons or from the electorate in the general election that inevitably would follow his selection as Premier, should Baldwin quit. Thus Baldwin, as leader of the conservative party, ultimately would control the situation and have the King at his mercy.

4—Mrs. Simpson is in France, seeking a place of seclusion. The part she will play in future acts of the empire's drama was not clear. But one thing was plain today—the King still intends to marry her.

There was no sign during the morning of the king either at Buckingham Palace, at Marlborough House, or at St. James Palace, and it became doubtful that he even had occupied his car when it left Belvedere.

Mysterious Plane

It never is possible to tell for sure whether he is in the car, for the rear windows are painted black.

Informed sources believed Edward might remain in the deepest reflection over the week-end in some country retreat.

(A dispatch from France said a British civil plane, which was granted official privileges by French authorities, left Le Bourget at 11 a. m. for Orleans, about 45 miles northeast of Blois, which place Mrs. Simpson left early this morning. The plane was piloted by a man named Urquhart.)

A group of Conservative members from the Commons met in the smoking room yesterday, it was learned, after the historic meeting in which the prime minister announced the cabinet's refusal to sponsor legislation enabling the King to marry Mrs. Simpson.

Cabinet Meets

The dissenting group decided to send personal letters to the monarch, assuring him of their support in any action he might think necessary in defense of his constitutional rights.

Demonstrators shouted their allegiance to the British ruler as a wave of sentiment in favor of the King swept London.

Members of the cabinet, meanwhile had assembled for what had been expected to be a momentous session. All were solemn and tight-lipped.

At the same time, a report came from Fort Belvedere, the King's country residence, that the ruler's big black car had left the grounds and headed toward London.

The cabinet adjourned at 10:40 a. m. (5:40 a. m., E.S.T.).

The meeting was unexpectedly brief—only 40 minutes—leading to belief the prime minister had received no definite answer from the King.

A crowd outside No. 10 Downing street, Baldwin's official residence, was greatly surprised by the short session, which ended with the hasty departure of the black-coated ministers.

"Flog Baldwin!" Cry

Sir John Simon, home secretary, known as the strongest legal mind in the cabinet, conferred with Baldwin for an hour before the session.

Some sources said their discussion might have dealt with a compromise which Sir John was understood yesterday to have been debating with Baldwin.

The cabinet will meet again at 10:30 a. m. Monday, it was announced.

"God save the King! God save the new Queen!" shouted jostling crowds outside Buckingham Palace. "Flog Baldwin! Down with the bishops!"

Throughout the night the paraders meandered through the avenues and alleys, their cheers always for their King and against a stern government ultimatum he must give up Mrs. Wallis Simpson, his heart's choice.

Mrs. Simpson, assured he would take no hasty step, found haven in Blois, France, after days of breath-taking developments which reached a climax yesterday in the House of Commons. She left Blois early today for an undisclosed destination in southern France.

Edward's Move

The crowd denounced Baldwin, Prime Minister of His Majesty's government, laid down the law in parliament against the ruler and his American choice for wife.

"There is no such thing as what is called a morganatic marriage known to our law," Baldwin said firmly.

"The only possible way (for the King to marry Mrs. Simpson without her becoming queen) would be by legislation dealing with a particular case. His Majesty's government are not prepared to introduce such legislation."

By his statement, Baldwin ended days of speculation over the governmental position. Carefully, painstakingly, he had mustered parliamentary support for his ultimatum.

The result left the next move up to Edward himself.

The ruler's friends, anxious for Edward's personal happiness but at the same time hopeful for the Empire, urged him not to make up his mind in a hurry.

The possibility existed fresh developments might materialize today. There was no official assurance, however, that anything further would be disclosed until Commons assembles Monday.

"Our New Queen"

But the cabinet's opposition to the former Baltimore debutante found little sympathy in the minds of parading Londoners.

Four Horns of King Edward's Dilemma

London, Dec. 5 (INS)—With compromise now out of the question, King Edward today faced four alternatives in his constitutional wrestle with his ministers:

1—Reject the advice of Premier Baldwin to abandon his marriage plans, which would mean resignation of the government, they try to name some new government that would abide by the royal wishes.

3—Abdicate.

'SMUGGLE' PLOT ON KING AIRED BY EDITOR

London, Dec. 5 (INS)—A concerted attempt to "smuggle" King Edward off the throne of England is being made, Lord Rothermere, one of Britain's greatest newspaper publishers, charged in a signed statement in his afternoon newspaper, the Evening News, today.

Prominently displayed on the first page and carrying the publisher's signature, the statement said:

"You cannot smuggle the greatest living Englishman off the throne of England during a week-end. A concerted effort is being made to do this.

"I have just returned from a trip around the world.

"Wherever I went and to whomsoever I spoke people of all nationalities gave expression to unstinted praise and admiration for our King.

WISHES OF PEOPLE

"Time must be given for the solution of this matter. The present haste is indecent and is giving rise to unpleasant rumors affecting high political and other personages.

"No government, which on this matter of supreme importance runs counter to the wishes of the people of England, can survive."

"Tell us the facts, Mr. Baldwin.

"The country will give you the verdict."

REFUTES BALDWIN

Still hammering at its suggestion that King Edward marry Mrs. Wallis Simpson as the Duchess of Cornwall, although Premier Baldwin said no morganatic marriage was possible, the News-Chronicle wrote:

"We believe the public will not lightly abandon the solution on which it was beginning to pin its hopes without much more explicit information than has yet been given.

"Why is it impossible? Why can't the necessary legislation be passed? Or why is it considered undesirable that it should be passed?

BITTER ATTACK

Amazingly bitter words were used by the Tory Morning Post, rock-ribbed Conservative sheet:

"Mrs. Simpson, aided by the divorce court, has already had two husbands and is now in the process of divorcing the second," the Post said in an editorial.

"Such experience is hardly calculated to command popular favor, but a deeper objection remains. Mrs. Simpson, although she has obtained a decree nisi, is still a legally married woman, and will remain such for the best part of the next six months.

"There must be something repugnant to good feeling in an attempt to arrange the remarriage of a woman who is still a wife."

POST THUNDERS

Would the King, asks the Post, its virulence increasing, "even risk jeopardizing the heritage and welfare of unnumbered dependents? Could any love or beauty make amends for such a default?

"Would he in after years be able to forgive himself for the indulgence of his passion, however strong and however honorable, at the expense of the happiness of others?

York Family on Week-end Holiday

London, Dec. 5 (INS)—The Duke and Duchess of York, Britain's next rulers if King Edward abdicates, and Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose, motored from London today to the royal lodge in Windsor Great Park, where they will spend the week-end.

Fifteen years ago, Washington society was chanting the praises of the present Mrs. Wallis Simpson.

As Mrs. Earl Winfield Spencer, Wallis was sweeping everything before her in the fashionable and diplomatic circles of the nation's capitol.

Early in 1922, those who watch such things closely, insisted Wallis' social successes were not exactly appreciated by her young naval-lieutenant husband.

Certain it is that Wallis did everything in her power to avert a final break. For she was much more proud of Lieutenant Spencer's successes in the navy department, than she was of her own social triumphs. Added to which, she was still deeply in love with the handsome naval officer who had first caused her heart to trip along at an accelerated pace when they met under a romantic Florida moon six years before.

Nomadic navy life, however, was to bring about a permanent separation.

Some years later, when Wallis asked for—and secured—a decree of divorce, she stated, in the proper legal phraseology, that Lieutenant Spencer had deserted her in June, 1922.

But when a call to duty in the China seas took Lieutenant Spencer away in December, 1922, Wallis was good-naturedly on hand to say "good-bye" to her husband.

He has never seen her since.

For when he came back to New York with the U. S. fleet from Australia the following year, 1923, and returned to Washington, his path did not cross that of his wife.

Toast of Fashion

They exchanged confidences—and clothes, and were considered two of the most popular young women in social-diplomatic society.

Not until 1933 did the friendship between Wallis and Rhoda Fullam Welch come to an end—when the once inseparable chums quarreled over Rhoda's criticism of several of Wallis' friends. During the 1923 and 1924 social seasons in Washington, Wallis Warfield Spencer devoted much time to her mother, whom she adored.

And it was her mother, now Allen, who kept advising Wallis to ask for a divorce from Lieutenant Spencer.

Mrs. Allen pointed out that Wallis and Lieutenant Spencer had been separated for almost two years, that there was little chance of a reconciliation and that the time might come when Wallis would want to plunge into the matrimonial seas for a second time.

Not until 1925 did she heed the advice of her mother and mutual friends and decide to seek freedom from the ties of her first marriage.

Blocking Wally's Decree Unlikely

London, Dec. 5 (INS)—Legal authorities today expressed the opinion that there is little likelihood of the King's proctor intervening to prevent granting of a decree absolute in the divorce of Mrs. Ernest Simpson.

The principal causes for intervention are misconduct by either party after the preliminary decree has been granted, and evidence of connivance in arranging the divorce grounds.

Conduct of both Mrs. Simpson and her husband has been irreproachable since the decree nisi was granted at Ipswich, and during the trial there was no suggestion of intrigue.

Simpson's Nephew Weds in Hubbub

London, Dec. 5 (AP)—A relative of Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson's divorced husband, it was learned today, was married quietly amid the hubbub over Wally's romance.

The relative is John Smiley, nephew by marriage of Ernest Aldrich Simpson's sister. He was wed yesterday to Lady Cecilia Wellesley, after a last-minute cancellation of the ceremony the day before at fashionable St. Margaret's Church.

Oxford Students Opposed to Wally

Undergraduates at Oxford University, England, are opposed to the marriage of King Edward VIII and Mrs. Wallis Simpson, the Harvard Crimson reported today in a story labelled "The Oxford Letter."

This letter, a weekly feature of the Crimson, was written by Christopher Janus, Harvard '35 and former editor of the student newspaper, who is now studying at Oxford.

KING CANCELS ENGAGEMENTS 'FOR PRESENT'

London, Dec. 5 (AP)—It was officially announced from Buckingham Palace today "all of the King's official engagements have been cancelled for the present."

The words "for the present" were received joyfully by those of his subjects who hope he will not abdicate in order to marry Mrs. Wallis Simpson.

The formal announcement was taken in informed circles to mean only that King Edward wishes to have his hands free to deal with the present constitutional crisis.

The King's engagements schedule for next week was heavy.

It included an inspection of the Scots Guards at the Tower of London Tuesday morning, with a visit to the Smithfield show in the afternoon.

Wednesday and Thursday King Edward was to have toured the potteries of Staffordshire and Birmingham and Saturday he was scheduled to open the new People's Palace at Mile End.

Small Towns on Edge Over History Contest

What Is His Best Achievement

Pupils Eager to Do As Well as Those From Cities

The Boston Evening American's Roosevelt Inauguration Tour Competition has made Massachusetts contest conscious.

There is rivalry among the more than 10,000 students who are competing for the 20 free trips to Washington, among schools, teachers, principals, superintendents and even among school committees.

Students realize that being selected as a member of the inaugural party is one of the greatest honors that can come to them.

Every school wants to beat schools in neighboring cities and towns. It is the football spirit brought into the classroom.

Without exception, history teachers wish at least one winner to be chosen from their pupils. The selection will be a tribute to their ability as instructors.

PRIDE AT STAKE

The small towns in the Berkshires are particularly anxious to have as good representation as big cities like Boston and Worcester. It will be definite proof that little schools are not inferior.

Principals desire the students under them to make a good showing.

Many of them will consider it a personal reward to have one or more girls and boys in their building chosen for the inaugural trip.

Superintendents and school committees by whose authority teachers are selected and employed do not want their cities and towns to lose representation in this contest which embraces the entire state.

TODAY'S QUESTIONS

State Commissioner of Education James G. Reardon will be chairman of the committee that will pass on all entries.

Other judges are Mrs. James Cunningham Gray, Boston civic leader; Professor Robert Earl Moody, head of the History Department at Boston University College of Liberal Arts; Dr. William P. Ryan of Holyoke, state commander of the American Legion, and Archie R. Giroux, Boston banker, member of the Lexington Board of Selectmen and chairman of the National Constitution Day Committee.

The ninth and tenth questions appear today. They ask:

9—What decision is the precedent for the authority of the United States Supreme Court to void an act of Congress?

10—What do you consider the most important achievement of President Franklin D. Roosevelt's first Administration, and why?

KEEP IN 100 WORDS

Every high school history book contains the answer to the ninth question. Only a few minutes will be required to find it and to write it on a piece of paper.

No book will be required for the tenth question. Every boy and girl is familiar with the Social Security Act, the N.R.A., the E.R.A., the C.C.C., the insuring of bank deposits, the reciprocal trade agreements and the many other statutes enacted during the past four years.

All that is necessary is to select an achievement a student deems most important and to explain why in not more than 100 words.

This done, students should review the answers given to the eight questions previously published, make any necessary revisions, and place ALL answers in ONE envelope addressed to:

Roosevelt Inauguration Tour Competition, Boston Evening American, 5 Winthrop Square, Boston.

Envelopes may be mailed immediately or any day next week, but not later than midnight, Sunday, December 13.

Wellesley School Strike Vote Off

Wellesley's five-day school strike was at an end today, parents having voted to allow their children to return to school Monday to end the strangest situation which has ever upset that normally placid town.

In response to pleas of their leaders to be "bigger than the school committee" and not jeopardize the positions of teachers in the affected schools, the 200 parents attending a gathering in the Sprague school auditorium voted unanimously to end the walkout.

So. Weymouth Man Killed by Auto

Death at the wheel today added a South Weymouth pedestrian's name to Greater Boston's list of persons killed in auto accidents during 1936. The new fatality brought this year's grim total of highway slain to 237.

Latest victim was William Wagner, 65, of Pleasant street, South Weymouth. He died at Weymouth Hospital today after being struck in Main street, South Weymouth, by a car allegedly operated by Miss Mildred Pettee, 21, of Pickel street, South Weymouth.

Police said she told them she was blinded by lights of approaching machines.

'Duelling Doc' Wins 3d Bout

Budapest, Dec. 5 (INS)—Dr. Franz "Tiger Man" Szigan, after whacking a three-inch piece out of his third duelling opponent's pate before police stopped the fracas today, declared the combat must be concluded.

That makes him victor in his first two duels, both fought with pistols, with seven other affairs yet to go.

Delay "Pool King" Trial

East Greenwich, R. I., Dec. 5—Trial of Cameron O'Connor, alleged Rhode Island "pool king," and three others, charged with gambling conspiracy, was postponed here today until Monday because of the illness of Juror John R. Stringer.

RULES OF CONTEST

Here are the rules for the Roosevelt Inauguration Tour Competition for Massachusetts High School students:

1—The Boston Evening American is publishing 10 questions dealing with subjects of American history. The best answers to these questions will earn the writers free trips to Washington to see the inauguration of President Roosevelt. The awards will be made to 10 boys and 10 girls in high schools throughout the state. Answers to each of the 10 questions must not be over 100 words.

2—The questions are being published daily for 10 days—from Wednesday, November 25, until Saturday, December 5. Answers must not be submitted separately. They must be kept until the last question is published. Then all 10 answers must be submitted as a SINGLE ENTRY.

3—The deadline for the reception of entries will be midnight, Sunday, December 13. Entries mailed will be received if they bear postmarks not later than midnight of that date. A Board of Judges will pass on all entries and their decisions shall be final and not subject to appeal.

Communications relating to the contest should be addressed as follows:

POPE PIUS STRICKEN, ALL AUDIENCES CANCELLED

optimistic hopes for the Pope's recovery. But it was recalled his trouble today was presaged by his general physical condition during the last three years.

"Owing to our great age, we must always be ready and prepared for the final call."

Dr. Amanti Milani was called to attend the Pontiff and has remained constantly at the Pope's bedside, prelates said.

The Pope's condition was discovered early this morning by his valet, Malvestiti, when he attempted to assist the Holy Father in arising, church officials reported.

The prelates declared the Pope was unable to get out of bed. Doctor Milani was called and made an immediate examination.

The result, persons close to the Vatican declared, was determination the Holy Father had been stricken with paralysis, which it was said, is feared to be progressive.

The paralysis was attributed by the attending physicians to inflammation of the heart.

Some recalled that both the Pontiff's mother and elder brother, Fermo, were sticken in the same way.

SERMON AT BEDSIDE

Fermo spent the last year of his life in an armchair, which, some believe, may be the case with the Pope.

This morning, the Pope was to have attended the closing ceremony of the retreat which he began last Sunday night.

When it was found he could not arise, six cardinals and a group of bishops and prelates who had gathered for the ceremony, went to his bedroom and held the services there.

The Jesuit preacher, Father Magni, who was to have read the last sermon of the retreat in the Sistine Chapel, read it instead standing beside the Pope's bed.

The Pontiff listened intently, prelates said, apparently in possession of all his mental faculties.

Cardinal Eugenio Pacelli, papal secretary of the state, read a message signed by the Pope himself.

In the message, the Pontiff called attention to the importance of the spiritual exercises just concluded and excused himself for not attending, owing to a "local disturbance."

News of the Pope's illness spread quickly throughout the Vatican, causing consternation in all quarters.

AUDIENCES CANCELLED

It was announced at noon that all audiences had been cancelled. The Pope was to have received hundreds of persons, mostly newly married couples who had been sent invitations.

They were told the audiences might begin Monday. Private sources said, however, there was no definite time set for the receptions.

Some prelates expressed the theory the Pope was stricken as a consequence of the thoroughness with which he had conducted this year's spiritual retreat.

Others thought it might be due to the sudden change from his ordinary, strenuous work to complete repose in meditation and prayer.

Prayers will be offered in Rome churches tomorrow for the Holy Father's health.

Pontiff Sufferer From Heart Inflammation

Pope Pius, "Pope of the Conciliation," has been a sufferer for some time from inflammation of the heart.

His infirmities, coupled with Rome's humid heat, drove him to his summer residence at Castel Gandolfo last June 30, several weeks earlier than usual.

Shortly before leaving the Vatican he submitted to a thorough medical examination which led to rumors the 79-year-old pontiff was in critical health.

STRENGTH CONSERVED

Earlier in the year he had cancelled several public audiences and had foregone his usual celebration of the Easter mass at St. Peter's.

In February, when the Pope celebrated the 14th anniversary of his coronation, it was evident every effort was being made to conserve his strength.

A high prelate said then the Pope's only ailment was endocarditis and that he did not want to be bothered with physicians.

(Endocarditis is an inflammation of the endocardium, which is the endothelial lining membrance of the heart.)

There has been mystery over whether the Pontiff suffers arterio sclerosis (hardening of the arteries). One doctor said the Pope had a form of arterio sclerosis and had received injections for it.

The Pope's infirm health has been noted in his heaviness of limb. Sometimes, after a brief walk from one audience chamber to another, he has been forced to sit down on the throne chair.

HELPED BY VACATIONS

On other occasions he has addressed pilgrims longer than he had intended, in order to rest himself.

At other times the pontiff has been observed breathing heavily while he speaks.

Pope Pius, physicians say, has benefitted greatly from his vacations at Castel Gandolfo among the Alban Hills, 18 miles from Rome. He started going there in 1934, after 12 years as "prisoner in the vatican."

Although the Holy Father has expressed disdain for too much attention, prelates said he has lately taken closer care of his health than ever before in order to prolong his service to the church.

He has given up virtually all exercise and climbs no stairs.

Although Pope Pius has seen his strength declining, he has continued the hard, unrelenting work he initiated when he ascended the chair of St. Peter.

HARD DAY'S WORK

To him, work means getting up early, saying mass, listening to news reports, dictating answers, documents, apostolic letters and encyclical letters; conferring with the administrative prelates; receiving ecclesiastical dignitaries from all parts of the world, then hundreds of pilgrims on an average of 200 daily, receiving more dignitaries and dictating more church business after luncheon and until about 10 o'clock at night.

He once told a prelate he did not want to die a lingering death, but "Sulla Breccia." (At the breach).

His diet is frugal and regular. He permits himself a little light wine at dinner, rarely drinks coffee and takes only boiled water.

He does not smoke. He enjoyed cigars before he became Pope—but from day he was elevated to the throne he gave them up.

Pope Pius has been deeply affected by menacing world affairs, and has been grieved by the civil war in Spain.

At the end of the Italo-Ethiopian war he expressed the fervent hope that it would be "a prelude to true European and world peace."

Beaux Arts Ball Attended by 3000

New York, Dec. 5 (UP) — The celebrities of the society, theater and art worlds danced away the hours at the annual Beaux Arts Ball until dawn today.

Fully three thousand people attended the glamorous function at the Hotel Astor in Times square. The revelers were dressed in costly, make-believe costumes designed out of many a history book.

The big moment came at midnight when a glittering pageant began. This year the ball was known as the Fete De Rayon Fantastique and the theme was fantasy.

To carry out the idea, the ballroom was decorated with thousands of yards of rayon and cellophane, turning it into a fairyland of light and color.

Almost

"Help, I've been robbed!" a voice yelled.

"What do you mean—half-robbed?"

"I didn't have any money," the caller said.

Timilty Puts Police Leaders on the Spot

Drastic shake-up among ranking officers of the police department was presaged today in Commissioner Joseph F. Timilty's demand for reports from division commanders and sergeants on gambling establishments raided by Captain James T. Sheehan's clean-up squad in their territories.

The commissioner also announced his "100 per cent support" of Captain Sheehan and more than doubled his raiding squad with the professed determination to wipe out every trace of gambling rackets in the city.

The commissioner also proved his sincerity by refusing Captain Sheehan's request that he be relieved of his present duties and insisting that he remain on the job, promising to assign him as many men as he needed in his campaign.

Captain Sheehan will be on the job until he informs the commissioner that the city is absolutely free of gambling resorts, the commissioner said.

It was also indicated that Sheehan's post as inspector of divisions may become a permanent one as a result of the success of his forays on gambling rackets and allnight clubs which have been defying the curfew law.

Six more arrests were made by the cleanup squad in Brighton and the South End for number pool operations.

Commanders of eight of the city's 15 police divisions find themselves in difficult positions today as a result of the Sheehan raids after they had reported the districts in their charge were free of gambling operations.

The expected shakeup of ranking officers in the department was to be based to a large extent on successful raids by Sheehan's squad on divisions reported "free of gambling dens," it was indicated.

So. Boston Fire Kills 1, Hurts 6

His clothing in flames, George Scott, 50, leaped from the roof of a three-story dwelling in Broadway, South Boston, to his death as a two-alarm fire swept the structure, causing $2000 damage, today.

Frank Scott, 42, who was carried from the building by Sergeant James P. Culleton and Albert James was taken to City Hospital suffering from burns. Four other persons were forced to flee from the house.

The victim of the leap, apparently fled to the roof to escape flames. Neighbors saw him, wrapped in flames, stagger to the edge of the roof and plunge headlong to the ground, 60 feet below.

He was rushed to City Hospital where he died an hour later.

Frank Scott, no relation, was asleep on the second floor when the fire started and was badly burned before he was rescued.

Forced out in addition to James were his wife, George Scott, clerk in the Suffolk Superior Court, no relation to the other two Scotts, his sister Madeline and their father, Michael Scott, 77.

SOVIETS O. K. NEW WAR LAW

Moscow, Dec. 5 (AP)—The Congress of Soviets today approved the new Russian constitution after amending it to create a commissariat of military industry and empowering the government to declare war "in case of necessity."

The clause empowering the government to declare was was believed inserted to bolster the Soviet Union's defensive alliances with France and other nations.

Under the original draft war could have been declared only in case of "an armed attack against the union of Socialist Soviet Republics."

The constitution as amended grants the government power to wage war "in a case of necessity to fulfill international obligations arising out of mutual assistance pacts."

The Congress accepted the constitution by a unanimous show of their red voting cards after Joseph Stalin, secretary-general of the Communist party, spoke for ten minutes in a low voice explaining the changes which had been made by the editorial commission.

Low Man Winner In N. H. Recount

Concord, N. H., Dec. 5—Completing its examination of the contested ballots, the state ballot law commission ruled today that Alphonse Roy, Democrat, was elected representative from the first congressional district in the recent national election.

The ruling broke the first tie in more than a century in any political contest. The tie developed in the recount, demanded by Roy after first tabulation showed his Republican opponent, Arthur B. Jenks, had a lead of 580 votes.

The ballot law commission declared that their 11-hour examination of the ballots showed Roy to be the victor by 17 votes, giving him a total of 51,695 as compared with 51,678 for Jenks.

Dist. Atty. Bishop Drops 3 Aides

General shakeup in the office of District Attorney Warren L. Bishop was expected following the discharge of three office aides.

Notices that their services would not be required after December 31 were received by Leo St. Jean of Lowell, chief indictment clerk and an employe of the office for 14 years, Miss Dorothy Titcomb, of the Back Bay, and Miss Gertrude English, both of whom have served as office secretaries.

Burglars Carry Away 40 Suits

Theft of 40 suits valued at $1000 from a Massachusetts avenue, Cambridge, tailor store was reported to Cambridge police.

The owner of the store, John Castarian of Surrey street, Cambridge, discovered the loss when he opened this morning. Entrance was gained by removing the glass of a rear window.

Proposes 6-Year President's Term

Omaha, Neb., Dec. 5 (AP)—Senator Edward R. Burke (D.), Nebraska, said today he contemplates introducing at the next session of Congress a constitutional amendment proposal to give Presidents of the United States a six-year term, with no re-election privileges.

Passing Bucks

Plummer, Idaho, Dec. 5 (AP)—Some Indian boys, in need of a football, found a lady's handbag. It served the purpose for an entire afternoon of kicking and passing.

That evening, when alert parents examined the bag, they quickly returned it to its owner, Pauline Campbell, 92. It contained $100.

LOYALISTS LOSE 700 IN NEW SPAIN DRIVE

By THOMAS A. LOAYZA

Madrid, Dec. 5 (INS)—In the most horrible carnage of any single day in the Spanish civil war, Loyalist forces suffered more than 700 casualties in the battle for Pozuelo de Alarcon, key to the Escorial highway northwest of Madrid, Rebel broadcasts today asserted.

Smoke still rose today from the terrible visitation of 31 insurgent bombing craft over the capital. Loyalist government statements claimed recapture of Pozuelo, six miles from Madrid, and nearby Humera.

5000 ATTACK REBELS

After a four-day fight in which the insurrectos gained control of the road, vital because it cuts off the Loyalists in the Guadarrama mountains and protects the insurgent left flank, more than 5000 Leftists were thrown into the fray to regain Pozuelo.

Eleven government tanks, leading several militia phalanxes, swept wide around the rebels still holding the University City quarter of Madrid proper and suddenly emerged through a narow valley behind Sumera sanatorium.

Coolly, Nationalist machine gunners in camouflaged nests waited while the Loyalists slowly moved ahead. When the Madrid forces were half way up the hill to the Rebel emplacements, machine guns simultaneously opened fire, cutting down the militiamen like grain.

The Loyalists tanks pushed on but Rebel "75's" barked from artillery lines farther to the rear, disabling several of the tanks.

REBEL TANKS HELP

The Nationalist tanks at the same time clattered up and helped the Rebel machine guns and light artillery, according to Insurgent claims, and to the slaughter and complete rout.

Many military authorities in Madrid today believe the battle for Pozeulo, combined with the large-scale air raids, marks the beginning of a decisive struggle for the capital.

Fighting continued on other distant fronts, in western Catalonia and around Bilbao and Oviedo.

Following the example of the United States embassy, the British embassy today issued the following statement:

"With the prolongation of the war, and increasing destruction of the city, in which there are no exempted zones, His Majesty's embassy and consulate may receive orders to withdraw."

cat among happy mice. Mrs. Simpson wisely leaves England for the continent.

It has been suggested that all this trouble could have been avoided had the King decided to marry the daughter of Haile Selassie, recently Emperor of Ethiopia. She is of royal blood, so ancient as to make European kings look like parvenus.

Her father says he can prove that he descends in a direct line from King Solomon. He does not, of course; in the course of history many kings have been mistaken on that point of direct descent.

Marriage with the small, charming, but very dark Ethiopian princess, her mother of African blood, her father a mixture of Arab and other strains, would introduce into the English royal family that strain of "new blood" that is considered necessary to revive and strengthen a tired line. And, above all, Haile Selassie's daughter would have the great advantage of NOT being an American.

In Canada "churchmen asserted that the King's association with Mrs. Simpson tended to weaken the moral fibre of his subjects."

That must be a feeble fibre. What about the various, doubtless highly moral, but extremely intimate "lady friends" of the present King's grandfather, Edward VII? What happened to Canada's fibre under that King?

Foolishness has often ruined great states and no empire in recent history has made a more foolish exhibition of itself than the present exhibition by the British Empire. Does the British public not understand that it is better to have a contented king, staying at home with a wife whom he likes, than to have one married against his will, producing commonplace children, running back and forth across the English channel to see what Paris has to offer "on the side?"

H. L. Mencken of Baltimore says the King Edward-Wally Simpson story is "the best story since the Resurrection."

Barring the lack of reverence, the statement is hardly exaggerated. It certainly surpasses the great earthquake at Lisbon, the black death of the Middle Ages, and the destruction of Pompeii.

Intense world-wide interest shows that the wide-world is a passionate gossip, imbued with intense servile interest where royalty is concerned. It proves how far this age is removed from anything like real democracy.

ETERNAL MYSTERY SOLVED—MAYBE!

Women Are No Longer a Puzzle

There is one baffling mystery that we are about to clear up for the palpitating public in regards to the fickle female of the species.

It seems that when winter comes the girl who spent the summer outdoors on horseback, on the golf course, in the ocean or on the tennis court playing like a demon now curls up, like somebody's grandmother, by the fire with a good book and refuses to move.

The girl who lay languidly in a beach chair all summer now turns into an athlete and spends every available moment skating, skiing or tobogganing.

The innocent male supposes that there must be some deep, dark reason for this procedure. However, the answer is one of simple vanity.

The active summer girl changes into a sit-by-the-fire because in the hot sun she tans beautifully. Let her venture out in the cold breezes and she is anything but beautiful. Her nose gets redder than any self-respecting tomato, while her eyes water as though she were peeling extra strong Bermuda onions!

The other girl takes it easy during the summer because she burns to the color of a broiled live lobster. When she goes out to romp in the snow, however, it's a different story. Her cheeks turn to a rosy red, her nose behaves and her eyes just sparkle with the joy of living.

So you see, mystified males, there's a reason for everything.

PSYCHIC? YES!

While on the gap of sleep, did you ever sort of shudder and stiffen and hold on to a novel sensation of falling? You, seemingly, thud on the bed.

* * *

Tantalized by an itchy nose, did you ever delay the luxury of scratching it till you finish writing the sentence?

* * *

Lock the door? Come back to make sure? And, after going a block, did you ever feel an urge to return once more? You remember turning the key, and yet—you wonder?

* * *

Did you ever notice how you can expand your head to fit your hat, and thus prevent it from blowing away on a windy day?

* * *

After falling victim to an inanimate object through your own misfortune or clumsiness, or after trying, most unsuccessfully, to coax an article to do as you will, did you ever scold and threaten the same in language most unbefitting of a gentleman?

* * *

Fearing somebody has caught you talking to yourself, did you ever try to deny it by blending into a song?

O. K.—Cash N. G.—Hash

He saw me immediately and, hunching his shoulders forward, he came towards me. There was trouble in his eyes as he sidled in across the table from me. He kept his hat on and his hands in his overcoat pockets.

"So, I've caught up with you at least, beautiful," his voice edged ominously.

"But Ricco, I didn't run out on you," I said, hurriedly, trying to put truth in my tone.

He didn't believe me. His eyes told me that.

"You know, honey," he said, "I promised myself to get even the minute I saw you."

"You wouldn't dare," I said, knowing in my heart he would.

"Wouldn't I?" He hunched forward. "What do you suppose I have my hands in my pockets for? To keep them warm?" He laughed a short laugh. "Yeah, to keep the gun in my hand hot. Get it? Get it?"

The rouge on my cheeks must have paled—I was that scared. My face creased into begging wrinkles.

"Don't, Ricco. Don't!" I pleaded.

"Cut! Cut!" a voice shouted.

I stopped screaming.

"That was terrible," the director said, coming over to my side. "Terrible!"

INVENTOR NEEDS TO WORK

Did it ever occur to you that during your lifetime hundreds of simple gadgets will be invented to save the world time and labor?

Most of these inventions will not be made by great scientists, but by ordinary men and women whose ingenuity will find a way to fill some small need of the human race.

In the past, inventors of such simple gadgets as the clothespin, bottle-opener and zipper-fastener have made substantial fortunes from the proceeds of their devices.

Just think how widespread the use of these three contrivances is. Everyone knows of them and uses them. You can imagine what the profits have been to the originators of these inventions.

Each of these gadgets is so simple that you are probably wondering why you yourself didn't originate them. Anyone with imagination could have thought of them, and doubtless quite a few people did, but neglected to develop the idea.

It is not enough merely to have the idea for a creation that will be useful to the world, but the idea must be developed and a working model devised.

Desolate

My hair has thinned, and shadows grow before my weary eyes.
My stumbling footsteps move along the path to where my old home lies.
I can see it in the distance, As I had in days of yore
I can see the shattered windows and a hanging, broken door.

As I step upon the threshold, my heart is filled with pain
To think that after all these years I, alone, remain.
A sob that can't be silenced grips my lonely soul
For time, which is relentless has taken of its toll.

The memories it had offered painted life with cheer anew
And friendly faces I had prayed to see had made the skies more blue.

Crimes BY Formula

Another in the series of "Saint" novels, this might well be the mystery story to end all mystery stories, being replete with all the familiar ingredients: jewel robbery, torture, gun-play, disguise, escape and the inevitable foiling of the entire European constabulary.

Simon Templar, alias "The Saint," is "the gayest desperado in fiction, the Robin Hood of modern crime, the D'Artagnan of today."

Accompanied by a male friend, Monty Hayward, and a girl friend, Patricia Holm, he skips blithely through life, living on such airy sustenance as adventure and suspense.

He steals crown jewels, rescues fair damsels in distress and confounds the Continent's finest detectives no end.

"Getaway" is "escape literature" in more than one sense of the word—a frothing, amusing melodrama, distinguished by the author's flair for clever, colorful similies.

PRIDE OF NATIVE CITY

Times have certainly changed—for the better—since 102-year-old Mrs. Mary Goff of Haskins street, Providence, R. I., was a girl.

Candles have given place to electricity, horses to airplanes. One doesn't have to sit up all night and knit stockings for the entire family, or bake bread to satisfy one's household.

Mrs. Goff is the sweetest little old lady imaginable and lives with her daughter, Mrs. Manning, an octogenarian.

A widow of over 50 years, this centenarian has many descendants—five generations of them—to brighten her declining years.

Almost everyone in Providence knows about "Grandma" Goff with the silvery white hair, sky-blue eyes and cheery personality.

Smoke Gets in His Beard; Man Is Freed

(A Short Short)

Denton shivered. Of course they would never prove anything on him—they couldn't, he had been too clever for that, but the detective didn't seem satisfied. He poked around the room with annoying thoroughness, even inspecting the ashes and cigarette butts in the trays. The police seemed convinced that the elderly, bewhiskered guest of Mr. Pellman had shot him despite the voluble protests of old Mr. Kaus.

"I didn't kill him!" he cried, "I tell you I didn't!"

"You and Denton the butler here were all alone in the house, weren't you? One of you came down into the study where Pellman was smoking his pipe. You sat opposite here in this chair, smoked a couple of cigarettes, then shot him."

"Sorry, Mr. Kaus," the police sergeant was saying, "we'll have to take you in. You quarreled with Pellman before and tonight you came down and fought with him once too often. Come along."

Kaus tugged at his thick beard hysterically. "You can't arrest me!" he shrieked. "I didn't kill him!"

They were leading him out. Denton wanted to laugh.

"Wait a minute Sergeant. You're taking the wrong man." The detective had come slowly to his feet. "The murderer is the butler, Denton!"

"Don't you understand," he said smilingly, "that a man with a full beard never smokes cigarettes down to an inch-long butt?"

Xmas Basket Fund

Six Stars Added To Benefit Show

By THE CHRISTMAS BASKET FUND EDITOR

The names of six entertainers today were added to the program for the Club Mayfair's benefit party for the Boston Evening American-Sunday Advertiser.

Two acts of the "Shooting High" revue now appearing on the stage of the RKO Boston Theater are scheduled to appear on the benefit program arranged for tomorrow night by Manager Benny Ginsburg.

They are Mills, Kirk and Howard, and Miss Doris Rhodes, billed as the Melody Mannequin.

Also added to the entertainment roster, headed by the famed comedian Phil Baker, was the comedy dance team, Buddy and Claire Green, starting an engagement at the Club Mayfair after successful appearances in New York.

These performances as well as those already having signified their intention of appearing at the benefit party are giving generously of their time and talent.

UP TO CITIZENS

If Greater Boston responds as generously, by attending the Club Mayfair party, the Christmas Basket Fund will be a success . . . and on its success depends the happiness of thousands of Greater Boston's poor who are depending on the Basket Fund for a "merry Christmas."

Paul and Eva Reyes, Cuban rhumba team.

Dinner will be served at 8 o'clock, followed by two hours of sparkling entertainment and two hours of dancing from midnight to 2 a.m. Entire cost of the evening will be $2.50.

Some sort of medal in the Fund volunteers should go to "J. J. C." who told the Basket Fund editor:

"Nearly every other year I gave $5 to your Christmas Basket Fund. This year I'm not working, so I can give only $2."

"ONLY" isn't quite the right word, J. J. C. . . . it will mean a joy on Christmas Day to some family now facing only a memory of a hope for Christmas Day.

Two small Bostonians pooled their pennies and contributed $1 each to the Fund: Dorothy Ann Sullivan, 7, of Dorchester, and Billie Lyons, one-and-a-half years old, also of Dorchester.

"It gives me great pleasure to enclose my check for $25.00 for the Christmas Basket Fund sponsored by your paper. This is a most worthy cause and I am honored to have at least a small part in furthering it.

"I know of the good work that your committee does among the needy of our city and I urge all the people of Somerville to give it their hearty support.

"Sincerely,
"Leslie E. Knox."

And the following announcement came today from Frank Sawyer, president of the Checker Cab Company of Boston:

"Feeling certain that many shoppers during the next few weeks will be using taxis to speed their journey from one shopping district to another and to facilitate the carrying of many Christmas gifts, we have based the donation to the Boston Evening American-Sunday Advertiser's Christmas Basket Fund on this annual rush."

RIDERS WILL AID

The plan means that persons riding in Checker cabs from December 5 to 15 will be aiding a worthy cause as well as alleviating the exhausting care of Christmas shopping.

You can help a great deal by holding benefits or attending them. You can also join the ranks of Fund volunteers by telling us of clothing and articles of furniture you no longer need, by contributing directly to the fund, and by forming and joining Coin-A-Day clubs.

The last plan, the Coin-A-Day club, is of especial merit because it is no great burden to any single person and its results are amazing.

The important thing is to form a club. And once the pennies, nickels, dimes and quarters begin dropping you are assured of helping the Boston Fund in a big way.

MORE LETTERS

Here are more letters received by the Boston Evening American-Sunday Advertiser Basket Fund editor which will show you how urgently the collections of the fund are needed.

CASE 28

Have you ever sat by the window on Christmas Eve and cried bitter tears? I did last Christmas. That is why I am writing to you now. Those tears were not for me but for the little heads who had gone to sleep hoping for the Santa that didn't come. Oh, please don't forget us and let me sit down and cry again this year. Things don't look a bit brighter.

I am a young mother and soon must undergo a fourth operation. My children need clothing that I am unable to buy them. Welfare doesn't stretch far. If I could get a coat I would certainly appreciate it, as I am not very strong. I take a size 18. If ever it is in my power to help the needy I will do so because "we only pass this way once."

This poor family lives in South Boston. Anyone who wishes to help them may do so by calling Liberty [illegible], and ask for case Number 28.

Boston P. O. Gets 50,000 Additional Security Blanks

Fifty thousand social security blanks for employes were rushed to the Boston post-office today from Washington after the Boston postal district's supply had been exhausted.

The total number of forms already turned in, as the deadline at midnight aproached, was 450,500. A staff of 400 clerks will work throughout the day and all day tomorrow.

The Brockton and Holyoke postal districts also reported having run out of the forms.

Ten per cent of the forms already checked are faulty, it was learned. Applicants who turned in faulty blanks will receive new ones as soon as the rush is over.

Our Apologies To Mrs. Fisher

In the issue of the Boston Evening American of September 26, 1936, the pictures of four women were published over the caption "Seek Separations."

One of these pictures purported to be that of Mrs. Eva Thurman, who, the article accompanying the picture stated, charged desertion, and whose case was continued.

ADVICE on LOVE and MARRIAGE -:- By Beatrice Fairfax

Noisy Girls and Show-Off Young Man Fool None Save Themselves

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

"B Natural" is more than something every good musician should know. It ought to be embroidered in large letters on young men's cuffs and on girls' handkerchiefs.

At least, it should be prominently displayed where those who need it most could see it best.

The more I look at some young people, especially those who have enjoyed the advantages of a year or two in college, the more I wonder how they ever expect to find husbands and wives.

I know I am wasting time and space in describing them. Your mental picture of these offensive creatures is as vivid as mine. Yet, a little repetition might do some good. So here goes:

They come swaggering into restaurants, brazenly surveying the situation and taking imaginary command of all present with a single haughty glance.

They know themselves to be "superior animals" and they want YOU to know it, too.

REEK WITH POISE

If, heaven forbid, you have the misfortune to occupy a seat near them they'll never miss an opportunity to cram their self-admitted importance into your ears, and—if you let them—down your throat.

Of course, they'll disdain you, not even pretend to acknowledge your existence. But whatever words they address to those that happen to be with them will be meant SOLELY for you and other strangers present.

They fairly explode POISE.

And the way they talk: the language they use! It isn't English, I'm sure about that. Nor is it American. Rather, it is a strange mixture of the two, wholly artificial.

"Either" is "EYEther." "Rather" is "rAHther." And somewhere in their conversation our typical Yankee "can't" with a very flat "A" is bound to appear.

But obviously they are speaking a borrowed language—though certainly not an American one. It is their way of slamming home to you the fact that they have been EDUCATED.

SYNTHETIC CULTURE

To me, this is ridiculous. Real culture doesn't encourage boisterous girls and show-off men. It is only the realization one is so inferior that he cannot hope to improve that causes a person to make himself a perambulating circus.

My advice to young readers is simply this:

If you MUST "put on an act," do it in the privacy of your home.

Don't, I beg you, choose the public restaurant, the church or the theater lobby for your stage.

You ought to realize that older people can see through you as they would a washed window. And on them, no matter how diligently you strive to make an impression, your best efforts will be wasted.

Also—and this is important—there is nothing a real he-man hates so violently as he hates an artificial woman.

He's usually perfectly willing to leave her to the sissy type of man, whose show-off tendencies are familiar to everyone.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

For 16 years I have had to earn the family living, and as I was never trained for an office job, I had to take domestic work. I could not give my children a proper home: just light housekeeping, and the cheapest boarding houses. In one of these my son got into bad company and was sent by the court to a reform school.

When I finally obtained his release, he was changed from a fun-loving, affectionate boy to a bitter man. He came home a physical and mental wreck. When he was paroled, he was told by the court to live with me, but he has an apartment with another young man and he leads a wild life.

He is ill with T. B., which the doctor tells me could be cured by treatment, but my son says he has only four or five years to live, he means to make the most of it.

My daughter has two children, has been deserted by her husband, and is living on $35 a month alimony. I'm in very poor health myself, and would like to take some training which would enable me to earn a little money, as I am not strong enough to do domestic work.

If my son would only come back and live with me, I'm sure I could nurse him back to health.

WORRIED MOTHER.

MY DEAR FRIEND:

As your son was paroled by the court in your custody, the court is the proper agency to insist on his return to you. Consult the authorities that paroled the boy.

As to training, see what your city has to offer in the way of adult education. No two cities have the same program. Some offer almost the equivalent to a college course, and some so little that the classes do not amount to much. Consult your local superintendent of schools and see what is open to you.

It might help if your daughter and you shared a home—teamwork in families is the greatest of assets.

Bad Luck Or Bad Play?

By JOSEPHINE CULBERTSON

Many players think they are unlucky when the truth of the matter is that they are unskillful. Most of the losses they charge to unfortunate guesses are actually the result of bad play.

North:
♠ J 10 7 3
♡ K 7 2
♢ K 8 4
♣ Q 7 4

West:
♠ 9 6
♡ Q J 10 9 6
♢ J 5 3
♣ A 8 5

East:
♠ A 8 4 2
♡ 8 4
♢ Q 7 6 2
♣ 9 3 2

♠ K Q 5
♡ A 5 3
♢ A 10 9
♣ K J 10 6

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 N T	Pass	2 N T	Pass
3 N T	Pass	Pass	Pass

West opened the Queen of hearts and South won with the Ace. He saw that in order to bring in his contract he would have to knock out both black Aces. The danger was all too apparent.

If West had both Aces, he would run the hearts before South could make nine tricks; if West had once Ace and that were knocked out while dummy still had the King of hearts, West would have no entry to run the hearts; but if East's Ace were attacked first, he would knock out the King of hearts, and West would still have his Ace for entry to the rest of the heart suit.

South fidgeted and mentally tossed a coin. Finally, he chose to lead the King of spades, and lost the game. East won with the Ace and returned a heart. And, as South had foreseen, West got in with the Ace of clubs to run the rest of the hearts.

"Tough luck, partner," said South. "If I had started on the clubs instead of the spades, we'd have made the rubber."

North politely refrained from pointing out what was obvious to him. There was no reason for South to guess at all. Had he simply allowed West to hold the first heart trick, he could have won the second heart and started with either black suit.

If he happened to start with spades, East would not have a heart to lead and the club entry would therefore do West no good. South had simply never heard of holding up with a double stopper.

Married Comrades

CHAPTER 168

DICKY wasted no words in questions before acting upon my suggestion that he would better send another man to the tree.

He turned, rushed to the faucet, where the trooper and Jim were filling the sprayer tank with water, and the next instant I saw the trooper racing across the orchard to the tree from which Jack Leslie had just thrown the missile at his comrade. Then Dicky came back to the window.

"Good enough," Dickey said, and was turning away when his mother's voice interrupted him.

"Wait a minute, Rickard," she said imperatively. "For some reason Margaret has seen fit to conceal the fact that it was the sound of my voice which attracted the attention of that state trooper and gave Leslie the opportunity of hurling that missile. I did not see the occurrence myself, but it must have been my voice that was responsible, for there was no other sound.

"I am not in the habit of dodging responsibility for my acts," she went on, "and I shall not begin now. I appreciate your attempt to shield me, Margaret, but it was wholly uncalled for, and I am prepared to take the consequences for my indiscretion."

"It's going to be fatiguing to stand here for so long, Mother," I said with elaborate casualness. "We might as well sit down."

"Yes, I suppose we might," she said, and sat down immediately in the chair I held out for her. And then we watched and waited, interminably, it seemed, while Dicky and Jim brought the truck with the empty barrels from the barn, put the sprayer with them, pumped them full of cold water, and then drove the truck toward the tree in which Jack Leslie was a prisoner.

"I wonder what he will do," my mother-in-law said excitedly.

Dress Up Old Chairs

She sawed six inches off the wooden legs, trimmed the back cushion to fit, whacked off the projecting rear of the arms. Now that dowdy chair Aunt Martha didn't want has smart modern lines. Lucille will finish the seams with cord covered with bias strips of the beige rep.

She was careful to pad or round off any sharp corners of the wood to keep them from working through the fabric. She draped her material over the chair and anchored it smoothly with pins (or thumb-tacks in the tough spots) directly to the frame of the chair. She cut 1½ inches outside the pin lines for generous seam allowance.

With the money saved on chairs Lucille will buy just the luscious eggplant rug and coral and beige draperies she wanted.

She learned the easy steps for making the slip covers, also other smart chair and sofa covers from our 40-page booklet, "Making Slip Covers Successfully"—a complete illustrated guide to choosing fabrics, estimating yardage—including cutting, fitting, basting, stitching and trimming.

"Your Figure, Madame!"

HAVE YOU A "DE LUXE" FRAME?

By IDA JEAN KAIN

Copyright, 1936, King Features Synd., Inc.

ADD curves to normal weight and you have pulchritude . . . reduce a large-framed girl to streamlines and you have underweight. Regardless of fashions in figures, weight must be normal for your structure or it is not becoming to you.

If nature gave you de luxe lines, the most rigid diet and the most strenuous exercise will never give you a willowy silhouette. A too-rigid diet will leave you with bony contours and less vitality—not streamlines.

A large frame looks better with a generous padding of adipose tissue, and 5 to 10 per cent above the average may be normal for you. You do not want an excessive amount of fat, however—more than 10 per cent overweight is obesity even for the large frame, making a health and beauty hazard.

If you are more than 10 per cent overweight, reduce but be careful to allow enough calories for your high requirements. A thousand calories a day is dangerously inadequate as a reducing diet for you. While the average reducer needs approximately 1200 calories a day, you may need as many as 1400 to 1600 calories while reducing. You see, your normal daily calorie allowance will run around 2400 to 2600. Therefore, on 1400 to 1600 calories a day you can lose one to two pounds a week, which is fast enough for anyone.

Suppleness makes for grace in the large figure, and exercise must be a part of your program from the standpoint of figure as well as health. As a rule, the exercises most needed by the large-framed woman are those for the upper arms, the pectoral muscles supporting the bust, for the waistline and frontline.

IF SO, RIGID DIET WON'T HELP

To counteract a tendency to flabby flesh on the back of the upper arm, adopt exercise positions which bring the arms into movement at shoulder level. Any exercise with the arms held straight out at the sides or in front, shoulder level, uses the triceps muscles, which gives a firm contour.

These arm positions, and that in which arms are stretched straight overhead, strengthen the pectoral muscles and lift the bust to normal position. A sagging bust may be due not only to excessive adipose tissue, but to weak supporting muscles.

Stretching exercises are the most effective for slenderizing the waistline. The best position for strengthening the abdominal wall and restoring a straight front line is to lie flat on the back with knees flexed, feet flat on the floor. These movements are all incorporated in the specific exercises for which you may send.

TASTY EGG DISHES FOR IMPROMPTU MEALS

Try Famous Kentucky Recipe

By MARTHA LEE

WHEN friends drop in or the family suddenly decides that they simply must eat, eggs will stand the cook in good stead. They may be prepared quickly and in many appetizing ways.

And four or five eggs can be made into a part of a meal for six or seven persons by scrambling them!

All the charm of a simple dish is personified in a dish for which it is a bit difficult or unnecessary to give an accurate recipe. It will be one of the dishes that will call for "repeats" in the future. The recipe originally came from an old mountaineer.

The success of it depends upon care in the cooking to give the potatoes that crusty, rusty-brown incomparable crispness, good seasoning, and care in scrambling the eggs at the last. To make it, assemble:

½ cup bacon fat, or drippings or more onions, chopped fine
4 medium to large cooked potatoes
4 to 8 eggs
Salt and pepper

HOW TO COOK

Cut into small dice (½ inch or less) cold baked or boiled-in-jacket potatoes that are firm. Heat fat in skillet, spread onions over the bottom and cook until onions are delicately browned. Be careful not to burn any pieces. Add the potatoes and cook slowly so that the potatoes gradually assume that desirable crispness. Use a pancake turner or broad spatula for turning so that the potatoes will not be mashed. Season.

When the potatoes are just about done, remove the pan from the heat. Then break the eggs over the potatoes. Scramble the eggs, keeping them well over the top. More seasoning will be required.

It may be necessary to slip the the pan over the heat again for a few seconds. However, there should be enough heat within the potatoes and the skillet to cook the eggs. Taste. Cook to the desired consistency for scrambled eggs and remove to a warm serving dish before the eggs are overdone.

CREAMED EGGS

1 tablespoon butter
1 tablespoon flour
Dash of salt
½ cup evaporated milk diluted with ½ cup liquid off cooked or canned vegetables

Melt butter in top of double boiler and blend in the flour and salt. Stir the milk and vegetable juice in slowly. Cook 15 to 20 minutes, stirring often to keep smooth. Add 2 hard-boiled eggs, chopped. Heat well and serve on buttered thin dry toast.

SCALLOPED EGGS AND SHRIMP

4 hard cooked eggs
1 cup cooked or canned shrimp
½ cup buttered crumbs
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
2 cups medium white sauce

Slice hard-cooked eggs and add with parsley and shrimps to white sauce. Pour into well-greased casserole, top with buttered crumbs and bake in a hot oven for 15 minutes, or until the crumbs are brown.

FOR the prep school boys and the debutantes, there is a whole list of jewelry gifts. College and prep school boys are dressing up these days. They like jewelled cuff links, pearl stick pins, and special evening watches. They all want signet rings, with their fraternity or college emblem, or cigarette cases for wear with dinner clothes.

I Always Say:—

THAT beauty treatments are so silly. Now, instead of rubbing and greasing and using beauty clay, why don't they just boil women's faces? Boiling certainly takes the wrinkles out of a prune's face!

Betty Alden on 'Beacon Hill'

Junior Supper Dance Attracts Fashionables to Somerset

By BETTY ALDEN

EUROPEAN observers are constantly bringing to our attention indications that the world is in a turmoil . . . capitalism struggling against Communism . . . Kings against cabinets . . . and militarism staging a fight to the death against anarchy . . .

But we do not need the assistance of foreign correspondents to detect similar signs right here at home . . . The stealthy mailed fist of the Fascisti seems to be creeping right into our most exclusive circles . . . At any rate, they served Italian spaghetti instead of good old American scrambled eggs and sausage at the swanky Junior Supper Dance at the Hotel Somerset last evening . . .

PRISCILLA DENNETT

Daphne Brooks was evidently unaware of the subtle international note, for she wore an American Beauty taffeta gown which swished and swirled about her ankles as she danced . . .

Olivia Morgan Hallowell, too, was as patriotic as could be in her bright electric blue satin with a row of carnations across the top of her blonde curls, and a scarlet evening purse under her arm . . .

Mrs. William E. Ladd of Milton, chairman of the patronesses who govern the affairs of this exclusive set of dances, presided over the table where all the other patronesses and their husbands enjoyed their supper . . . She wore a shiny black satin gown draped and shirred in the latest fashion . . . and among her guests were Mr. and Mrs. William C. Cox, the latter in a beautiful gown of grape satin with a full billowy skirt edged with a deep band of pink velvet . . . Mrs. Arthur L. Devens, Sr., whose black gown had a wide shirred panel of scarlet velvet down the back, a scarlet purse and slippers . . . her daughter-in-law, Martha Means Devens, in glistening white satin with puffed sleeves and square decolletage . . .

Dorothy West in Velvet Gown

ONE OF THE LOVELIEST GOWNS of the evening was worn by Mrs. George Saltonstall West, who was also a patroness . . . It was fold upon fold of rich garnet red tulle, which made a striking contrast to her fair complexion . . . Her daughter, Dorothy West, chose a gown of pale grey crystelle velvet with a wide crushed sash of raspberry velvet and slippers of the same raspberry shade . . .

Since no debutantes are eligible to the Supper Dances, and only girls who have been "out" less than 10 years are invited, the 500 or so dancers are all more or less of the same group of young socialites, which makes the dances very congenial and pleasant affairs . . .

As she dashed into the lobby, followed by a trio of stags, Frances Williams was a picture of chic from head to toe . . . the wreath of tiny blue rosebuds in her hair matched the color of her blue taffeta gown, which had a tight bodice of deeper blue velvet and bands of the velvet around the full swing skirt . . . Her slippers combined gold with blue velvet and her wrap of gold metal cloth had a fluffy beige fox collar . . .

People who had to greet several hundred old friends during the evening were hard put to it to get a little variety into their salutations, but the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Hovey gave one wit an inspiration . . . "Ah," he exclaimed as he stretched out his hand, "Here's Hovey and hubby" . . . "Hovey," we might add, looked adorable in green and gold brocaded satin with a three-quarter loose swagger jacket and some gold doo-dads in her curls . . .

Reginald Wards in Happy Group

KITTY AND TIM CLARK, familiar figures in the North Shore polo and hunting set, paused in their dancing while Ruby Newman and his boys serenaded them with their favorite tune . . . Kitty was lovely enough to inspire a lyric writer, in her crimson velvet, made very simply to set off her graceful figure . . .

Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Ward sat on the divan in the lobby to toast their toes by the open fire and soon were surrounded by a crowd of friends . . . Priscilla Dennett bumped into an old friend named "Sam" whom she was delighted to see . . . and she led him around introducing him to all her crowd . . . Priscilla, like so many other young North Shoreites, came on from Kitty Talbot's dinner party, where the evening was begun in a merry fashion . . . Charles Peirson escorted Patsy Fuller from Kitty's dinner table to their table at the Somerset . . . and Horace Soule did likewise with Catherine Pentecost . . . while Mrs. Soule came in another carload with Elizabeth Sawyer and her fiance, Charles Mixter, Jr. . . .

Phyllis Forbes' challis frock was something different . . . of bright green, with an all over design of rambler roses . . . it looked warm and comfortable, as well as very effective . . . Marion Lawson in a gold and tangerine brocade arrived at the same time as the Eustis Wolcotts, and Ardelle Moseley in gun-metal lame with bright green slippers, was accompanied by her future sister-in-law, Leslie Bremer, and their boy friends . . .

Betty Soule carried her gardenias on her purse and Charlotte Rantoul wore a silvery and diamond tiara that looked like a piece of frosty window pane glistening in the moonlight . . . We also noted Agnes Osborne who looked as distinctive as usual with her long blonde hair done in a knot low at the back of her neck, and a white chiffon dress with an individual little jacket of chiffon clouded with silver and crystal beads . . .

MAKES DEBUT At Country Club Tonight

(Picture from International News Photograph Service)

MISS BETTY ALBERS, who makes her bow to the social world with a dance at The Country Club in Brookline this evening. Miss Albers is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Homer Albers of Irving street, Brookline.

Miss Nancy Cochrane In Debut

CLOSET SPACE is a serious problem for the social hostess giving a large house dance. Four or five hundred women's wraps, men's coats and top hats require far more room than the hall closet and an upstairs bedroom usually afford.

Mrs. Dudley Pickman, Jr., very cleverly solved this problem for her daughter's debut dance last evening, by having a tent erected on either side of the entrance to her house at 303 Commonwealth avenue. The tents covered the space from the doorway, across the narrow lawn to the sidewalk. The usual canopy was between so the guests checked their bulky outer garments before they went through the front door and into the receiving line.

Miss Nancy Cochrane, the honored debutante received with her mother, Mrs. Pickman, against a background of yellow roses and white lilies. Though mother and daughter are both blonde, each chose a different color to set off her lovely hair. Miss Cochrane wore heavy white faille, several white camellias in her hair and carried a muff of the same flowers. Her mother wore glistening black velvet.

A large ushers' dinner was held at the house before the party and among the girls who attended were Susan Russell, Anne Ayer, Julia Barbour, Cynthia Forbes, Phyllis Howe, Betsy McKean, Margaret Parker, Elizabeth Sagendorph, Jane Ragle, Hope Bacon and Martha Bacon.

PRESIDENT HAS REST AT SEA

Aboard the U. S. S. Chester at Sea, Dec. 5 (AP)—President Roosevelt, released from the care of official meetings which crowded his trip to the Inter-American peace conference at Buenos Aires, rested and relaxed today aboard the cruiser Indianapolis as it ploughed homeward through a rough sea.

Steaming at 21 knots, the ship was approximately 3300 miles from Trinidad this morning.

The President's daily routine varies little now, but he expects soon to begin drafting the annual presidential message to Congress and also to start work on the budget.

TAYLOR MAKES HIT IN TEST

'I'm Shot-Dying' Registers With Director

Robert Taylor scored in his first acting test in Hollywood because of his instinctive dramatic flair. Read how he surprised the veterans of the lot in today's installment of his intimate life story by Lydia Calvert, special writer for the Boston Evening American and Boston Sunday Advertiser.

By LYDIA CALVERT

Special to Boston Evening American

The girl at the switchboard of Pomona College began to frantically plug the cords in and out.

"He's not in the library? Well, do you know where he went? No—it's Hollywood. Hello? Gymnasium? Not there? Yes, Hollywood wants him! Oh, there you are!" her voice was ecstatic.

"Mr. Brugh, I have a long distance call for you—Hollywood—yes, MGM studio."

"Here's your party."

Said the bored voice of long distance:

"Would he consider coming over to Culver City for personal discussion? Mr. Louis B. Mayer would like to see him."

Weakly the brave Captain Stanhope of "Journey's End" placed the receiver back on the hook. His long body slumped back in the chair. His head swam.

Robert Taylor, mopping his brow with a hand from which the strength had suddenly gone, said:

"Whew!"

"Congratulations, Mr. Brugh!"

Bob told me:

"Never in my life have I ever gotten such a thrill as that. I was confused and amazed, I could hardly talk."

He had played the part of Captain Stanhope with his whole soul.

The stark tragedy of the play, laid in a front line dugout from which men went out to kill and be killed, had fired his imagination. He had lived it.

The presence of an audience had not even entered his consciousness—an audience in which sat a talent scout.

He had promised, in a sort of daze, to come to the studio.

Still numb with unbelief he wrote a letter home and put a special delivery stamp on the envelope. Back came the answer from his mother. It was characteristic.

"Whatever you do, finish your education before you decide," she wrote. "Your father and I agree that this is a matter for you to determine. But be careful, son. Take your time."

He went to Culver City, where the great M-G-M studio is located.

"I'll never forget my first impression of a 'lot,' Robert tells me. "The big stages, the deserted cities, the out-of-door sets of movies I had seen, the extras hurrying here and there."

The day before I had driven over the M-G-M lot and had seen the public square where the late and beloved Irving Thalberg had directed the dueling of Leslie Howard, Basil Rathbone, John Barrymore, for "Romeo and Juliet."

I had seen a forest of trees all mounted on movable blocks; I had seen the Colonial houses from which "Old Hickory" made his famous speech in "The Gorgeous Hussy."

It was easy to imagine the thrill the senior from Pomona had felt on seeing it all and knowing that he was soon to be a part of it himself.

He met Oliver Hinsdell, the veteran dramatic coach, and was invited by him to report at the studio each Saturday for dramatic coaching.

He didn't overwhelm the stranger with praise, but the story of his first line tryout with the coach now is a matter of history. It is a story that has been told, but it bears repetition.

"He shot me! I'm dying," were the words that put Taylor up a few notches in Hinsdell's estimation.

These words are a favorite old stumbling block for young actors. When they hit them, they hit them hard—usually. They put all the drama of their pent-up souls, all the emotions in their bodies into this line so filled with tragic import.

"He shot me! I'm dying!!"

It is only the trained actor who knows the full value of restraint.

But strangely, intuitively Taylor knew, and when he came to those words he paused.

The boy's voice dropped to a whisper. A look of agonized wonder came over his face as he clutched his hands slowly to his heart.

"He shot me," he said. The quiet voice was awe-stricken, wounded. "I'm dying."

He had won his first encounter. Hinsdell rubbed his hands together. His expression didn't change.

"O. K.," he said, and walked away.

Continue this fascinating and intimate story of Robert Taylor's life in tomorrow's Boston Sunday Advertiser. Then get Monday's Boston Evening American; the life story will continue.

The Christmas Gift Problem

HAS that old bugaboo Christmas shopping got you? Then let Good Housekeeping Magazine come to your rescue. Its shopping service lists these practical Christmas gift suggestions.

To the hostess who entertains frequently you might give a dinner bell of white pottery trimmed in color. It's not only useful but will add a bright note to the table. Or you might give her a new crystal oil-and-vinegar cruet made in the form of two fishes. The fantail of each fish forms the stopper. Or perhaps she could use some fruit plates of white china with blue border and assorted fruit designs in the center of each plate.

* * *

For a young man, select a pigskin back clothesbrush that opens with a slide fastener to reveal a comb, file, shaving soap and razor. If he is a man-about-town, give him a white silk evening dress muffler with his own monogram. Men of all ages will go for a tunic-length robe of brocaded crepe, silk-satin lined with Tuxedo revers in satin.

* * *

And for the children—any girl would welcome a set of Indian beadcraft. It contains a bead loom, ten bunches of Indian seed beads, spool of thread, beading needles, beeswax, ring-making kit of wire and jewels, agates and center stones, as well as a design book with instructions. A boy would like the new aerial ladder truck. This toy has a release that raises the ladder when the rubber bumper bumps into the wall.

B. C. Players To Present Play

All the stark realism of "Yellow Jacket," a story of man's war against disease, will be revived by the Boston College Dramatic Club when it presents the play on Wednesday and Friday evenings at the Majestic Theater.

A group of prominent people will witness the production. William Cardinal O'Connell heads the group, which includes Bishop Francis J. Spellman, Mayor Frederick W. Mansfield, Virginia Grimes, president of the Philomatheia Club, Governor-elect Charles F. Hurley, Theodore Johnson, William Duggan of Milton and officers of both the Senior and Junior Philomatheia.

Among the patrons for the presentation are Mr. and Mrs. Vincent P. Roberts, Charles J. O'Malley, Mrs. Catherine J. Curran of Milton, Julia Prendergast of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. John S. Keohane and Dr. Joseph Stanton of Boston.

Also lending support are Mr. and Mrs. W. Russell Burke, Mrs. R. A. Nordbloom, Dr. and Mrs. Thomas A. Giblin, Dr. and Mrs. Nicholas King, Mrs. George McCarthy and Mr. and Mrs. James F. Burke.

St. Joseph's Alumni To Hold Bridge

To aid the Christmas Basket Fund of St. Joseph's Women's Club, the alumni of St. Joseph's School in Roxbury is sponsoring a bridge and fashion show at the Brunswick Hotel Monday evening.

Marie Fewore has planned the affair assisted by Rita Carlin, Ruth Perchard, Marguerite O'Brien, Mary Kenney, Lillian Jolley, Marjorie Sears, Helen Graham, Catherine Grant, Eleanor Roberts and Mrs. Althea Donnellan.

The parade of lovely fashions will be climaxed by a bridal party procession, with Alma Leonardi posing as the attractive bride. In her party will be a group of attractive attendants showing appropriate costumes of mid-winter weddings, Mary Fay, Marie O'Dean, Catherine Gillis, Margaret Jolley and Mary Byrne.

Others modeling fashionable togs will be Millicent Adair, Jeanette Curran, Agnes Rogan, Mary Collins, Mrs. Alice McLaughlin and Mrs. Mildred Murray.

Musical Gem Symphony Treat

By RUTH MARSTERS

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, returning to conduct the regular pair of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra after a two-week absence from this series, added yet another item to his already considerable contributions towards the making of music history.

In this instance it lay in presenting a Symphony in D by Clementi in its first performance in America.

Clementi, the virtuoso, the composer of piano compositions, the publisher, and piano manufacturer have thus dwindled in importance. It is suddenly Clementi, the symphonist, who is uppermost in contemporary thought.

That he was born in 1752, and died in 1832, is a circumstance which adds a suggestion of the piquant to his change in status in 1936.

* * *

Briefly it came about in this wise. A musicologist died in London in 1917 and his effects sold at public auction. Among various manuscripts, were found several by Clementi. A rather desultory attempt had previously been made to find certain symphonic writings of Clementi which were known to have been performed during his lifetime and to have excited favorable comment. The Library of Congress at Washington, D. C. acquired the manuscripts through the acumen of Carl Engel.

Alfredo Casella has arranged the Symphony in D in its present form, and lo, we have a new symphony a century and a quarter years old!

* * *

Dr. Koussevitzky opened yesterday afternoon's program with Handel's Sixth Concerto Grosso for String Orchestra. certainly the greatest of 12, this work is Handel at his most Olympian, at his tenderest, at his most vivacious.

It received a glorious performance at the hands of Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra—one which can seldom have been achieved in its entire history of performance.

The last half of the program was devoted to Wagner: "The Siegfried Idyl" and "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried" performed with such sensitiveness and beauty of tone as to make them unforgettable, the Overture to "Tannhauser" with a dramatic intensity that reached heroic proportions.

The program will be repeated at this evening's concert in Symphony Hall.

LEISURE TO REPENT

By Ursula Parrott

Keith Sheldie knew he was letting Denise Rendale down badly when he did not offer to marry her upon learning her father had gone bankrupt. However, there was nothing he could do about it, for wasn't he dependent on his wealthy father? And for some unknown reason, Sheldie, Sr., did not want his son to marry. To do so, meant being disinherited.

Keith frankly explains the situation to Denise. Though disappointed and brokenhearted, she bravely faced him and said: "Let's never see each other again. Good-by!" At home, Denise's sister, Felicia tries to console the former in her matter-of-fact fashion by saying, "This time next year you'll have forgotten him or near enough. Didn't you know I had a broken heart once myself?"

Then Felicia confides how she loved the late Duane Fenton and, even on the day of her marriage to Eustace Gardiner Dayne, she hoped Duane would hear her heart calling and come to her.

At first, Denise is indignant but later, when the mother she adores comes in with tears of happiness in her eyes for the financial aid Gilbert had given Mr. Rendale, Denise is in doubt as to just what course to pursue. Gilbert calls. He looked like Keith, but stronger, less handsome.

CHAPTER V

He had been East a great many times before, at thirty-five, he decided he would like to spend a good part of his life there.

That happened at the precise moment when at the house of his Eastern representative he first talked to Denise Rendale, and she looked at him kindly, if very remotely.

Her married sister Felicia Dayne was much easier to talk to, he discovered. He wouldn't like his wife to be quite as amiable!

For that thought, he occasionally reproached himself as provincial. Being provincial had worried him occasionally in his life, especially in London, where they called it "Colonial," with an odd inflection. He had regretted that his father's plan to send him to Oxford had never been carried out.

The war had prevented. He had served, absurdly young, with the Canadians; and had come back to find his father busy as ever, but grown very old, almost feeble. He refused to consider leaving him again.

Past Vs. Future

So his only education was at the hands of the English tutor who had accompanied his father and himself about on their journeys through British Columbia and Alberta, east to Saskatchewan, north to the Yukon. The tutor taught him the classics well, taught him French with a bad British accent, and English literature superbly.

Curious man, that earnest young tutor, with his determination plain never to show surprise at the width of the open spaces. He left them shortly after the war started and died in his first month at the front.

Gilbert Windon stared into a dim Venetian mirror in Michael Rendale's drawing-room with an air of surprise. Why should his thoughts suddenly be full of his boyhood when the Northwest had seemed the most glamorous place on earth, and he thought himself a kind of crown prince to an important dynasty?

He knew why: Because, being perfectly confident in himself, he feared nothing of the judgment of all the people he knew, except the judgment of a slender blue-eyed girl who might think him alien to her!

He had never regretted the sudden moment when he had told Felicia. He simply had to tell some one, while he watched Denise turn to that worthless young Keith Sheldie with her eyes shining, and turn to him always with her eyes far off. And Felicia had said Denise would never marry Keith, that it was just "boy-and-girl nonsense. Denise will outgrow him in a season."

It was in the summer in the country that Felicia had said that. He was not sure about it. The nuances of life by Long Island Sound were so far removed from the simplicities by Queen Charlotte's Sound.

The Bare Truth

Still, he had waited, traveling West on a hurried trip, and worrying all the way lest Denise's engagement to Keith be announced while he was gone, and traveling East again wishing she would seem glad to see him! Which she had not, but had seemed just polite as usual.

He was glad Felicia had asked him to help in her father's affairs. He liked Michael Rendale, who seemed to him something like his own father, but without his fire. Besides, though he didn't want Denise to feel she must be grateful, it seemed somehow to bring them closer—that he'd been able to help.

And now he was determined to speak to her at last.

Felicia said: "Denise has dismissed Keith."

"You shouldn't tell me, you know."

"I know; but don't look so moral and Western about it. I happen to want you for a brother-in-law."

He said, rather heavily: "I've gathered that; but it's not clear to me why."

A dimple showed by Felicia's scarlet mouth. "Because you have money, my sweet; and also because you are a lamb."

He was really angry, but that pretty mocking woman did have the ability to make him speak his mind. He spoke it. "Your sister would not think of marrying me because I happen to have money."

"Don't worry, darling. She certainly won't marry you at all if you look at her with that thunderous face. It's nice you have money. We all need it except me. I get mine, in the way of fancy gifts for sweet smiles, from my husband's relatives. Like this cape, which was from my grandfather-in-law. I called on him in a spring suit and told him I had nothing suitable for his granddaughter-in-law to wear, to keep me warm. Also I shivered a little. He worries about colds.

"Come to think of it, when you're married to Denise, you can give me beautiful presents, too, of course. You'll be in the family."

"Felicia, why do you mock at everything?"

She said in a hollow voice: "Ah, I have a tragedy. I danced with the Prince of Wales once and was never able to forget him!" She blew him a kiss and went on down the hallway.

Mrs. Rendale came in a moment later, and rather embarrassed him by her gentle thanks. When he had accepted her invitation to dinner, she excused herself, saying: "Denise will be down in a moment or two to entertain you while I dress. She went for a long walk and came home rather tired. I expect she's resting a bit before dinner."

His heart began to thump. On a long walk, no doubt, with that young man of whom she was fond. And something had happened between them that Felicia knew. That something might increase his chance.

He had met the Keith Sheldies of the world, east and west, in Europe and America. Well-dressed, well-mannered, inconsequential. But not inconsequential if a woman one loved, loved one of them . . . He heard footsteps in the corridor.

Drowning in the Dark

A Shipyard Worker Tells the Tale of a Terrible Hour

By FLOYD GIBBONS

HELLO EVERYBODY:

You know, I've heard it said that drowning is one of the pleasantest ways there is to die. I don't believe it. I've seen men die in half a dozen ways. None of them were pleasant, even to watch. But it strikes me I'd take any of them in preference to drowning.

FLOYD GIBBONS

Yes—drowning is bad enough. But it's one thing to drown in the open water where you've at least got a chance to fight for your life, and another thing to face the sort of drowning Mack Tanner did—shut up in the dark, in a place from which there was no escape. In a place where fighting for your life wouldn't even so much as prolong the agony.

Mack lives in New York City. In September, 1917, he was working at the boat building trade, over in the big shipyards at Port Newark. Mack had been working on the job about three months when it happened—and what happened was that he was assigned to tighten the steel plated inside of one of the water-proof vacuum tanks of a ship they were building over there at the yard.

The tank was down below the lowest deck of the ship. Mack crawled down through the hatch and into the interior. The inside of that tank was honeycombed with heavy steel plates three feet square, and in the center of each plate was a hole just about big enough for a medium-sized man to crawl through.

Mack worked his way down to the place where he was to do his work. That was about 25 feet from the place he had entered—the hatch cover that closes the tank. He went about his job of tightening plates—was at it an hour or more and had the work half finished—when suddenly he looked up and saw water coming through one of the plate openings.

Mack swung his flashlight over on that trickle of water—and immediately he knew what had happened. His heart stopped beating at the thought. They were flooding the tanks to test them, unaware that anyone was down in them at work.

Says Mack: "I realized that my chance lay in getting to the hatch cover opening where I came in. It took me only about two minutes to crawl through the various holes and reach the hatch, but it seemed like a lifetime. When I got there, I got another shock—one that was greater than the first. The opening was shut tight and bolted down—and the water valve was open full force."

Mack started to shout for help, but it was no use. The men up on deck were all busy, and the noise of a half-dozen riveting guns drowned out all other sounds. Frantic with fear now, Mack began to bang on the steel deck with a wrench he had brought out with him.

By that time, the water was getting high. Mack was lying on his back with his head as close to the hatch cover as he could put it. The water was up to his chin, and his only hope—the hope that someone would open the hatch cover—was such a dim one that Mack couldn't believe himself it would ever come true.

There was only one thing to be glad for. Mack's helper wasn't with him that day. He had hurt his hand the day before, and just a short while ago had gone up to the infirmary to have it treated. That was a break for Mack's helper. But it was small consolation to a man who knew he was about to die himself.

The water was up to Mack's chin, and it didn't take two minutes for it to get up to his nose. At that moment, Mack gave up all hope of ever getting out of that castiron hellhole alive. And then—all of a sudden—the rush of water through the valve stopped abruptly. What did that mean? Certainly something was wrong. The water was still an inch or two from the top of the tank, and in any kind of vacuum tank test, they filled those tanks right up to the top.

Whatever the trouble was it was a break for Mack. It gave him a few more precious seconds of life. But maybe he couldn't hold on even to those few precious seconds. The air was bad in the few inches of space still left in the big tank. And the strain and tension were beginning to tell. Black spots were floating before his eyes.

He was fighting now to remain conscious. Mack didn't know why he was fighting. It wasn't going to do him any good. It must have been sheer instinct, at that stage of the game, that spurred him on to keeping his head up and out of the water.

Then Mack began hearing sounds on the deck above him. Hope leaped in his breast once more. Were they opening that hatch cover? They were!

When Mack came to he was in the shipyard hospital, wondering what had happened to save him from being drowned like a rat down there in the tank. He didn't find that out until his foreman came to visit him. Then he learned the whole story.

His helper—the one who had gone to the hospital to have his hand fixed up—came back to the ship and saw that the hatch cover was closed. He went looking for Mack and couldn't find him. Then he realized what had happened and ran to the foreman. The foreman had shut off the water and opened the cover.

Mack was in the hospital a week after that episode, and he missed seeing the launching of the ship that had so nearly cost him his life. But that didn't bother him. As a matter of fact, he hopes he never sees it again.

But don't miss out on this shower of ten-buck bills I'm tossing around. Send in that story to me. Monday Russell Nelson of Dorchester and the terrible tale of THE SAW THAT CLICKED.

Floyd Gibbons will pay good money for good TRUE adventure stories. Hundreds of people in Boston and nearby towns have received ten-dollar and hundred-dollar bills for their yarns, and there's no reason why you can't do the same, for, as Floyd says, everybody has had at least one adventure. Mrs. Florence Abbott of Beverly won one hundred and ten dollars for the story of her life's biggest moment, and you can do the same. For further details, see the box at the right side of the page.

In his first three fights Barlund has chilled three men (Sandy McDonald, Abe Feldman and Frankie Connelly) who have never kissed canvas before, has mounted near the top of the undistinguished class of second rate heavyweight fighters. Unlike his foreign predecessors, including Primo Carnera, Paulino Uzcudun, Phil Scott, Vittorio Campolo, Knute Hansen, Roberto Roberti and Hans Birkie, to name a few of the itinerant atrocities who plundered the U. S. people, spotted each other and went home, Barlund came sans publicity and belted over his first bums without aid of fakers.

WE WUZ ROBBED

THE FAMILIAR SPORT YELL, WE-WUZ-ROBBED, comes out of the South today, where the coach of Alabama U.'s football varsity scoffs at the selection of Pitt as the Rose Bowl opponent on New Year's Day. "Louisiana, beyond all question, was the logical choice," says Thomas, in which opinion West Coast sports writers concur.

WRESTLERS ON PENSION LIST

THE QUESTION OF WHETHER PROFESSIONAL wrestlers are people has been referred by Boston's leading mat impresario to the Social Security Board. He wished to know whether his cauliflower cuties were subject to the same old age pension laws as simple flesh and blood folk.

"Are they salaried men and thus classified as employes of a common boss?" the board asked.

The answer, significantly, was "Yes, in most cases."

"Then," ruled the Board, "The usual 1 per cent must be withheld from their pay and, as employer, you must add a like amount."

RECENT PRESS ANNOUNCEMENT THAT Jesse Owens, Negro Olympic sprint champion, has made $50,000 since his return from the games leads to the notion he must have printed it on a hand press. . . . Yeh, just like some of the big time Eastern football colleges hope the Carnegie Foundation makes a thorough, X-ray investigation of the gridiron octopus. . . . Some idea of the sincerity of the contending parties in the National A A U presidential election at Houston is the sob solo over the poor little mermaid who got soused on champagne and lost her Olympic ticket.

Smart Move

Coast baseball men present declared that Vincent, who is [illegible] and two years older than Joe, is a better thrower and just as classy a fielder but not as heavy a hitter or as fast as his illustrious Yankee brother.

[illegible]

Even Swap

It's safe to say that neither Terry nor McKechnie regards his third base problem solved by this shift. Both will keep on hunting for other hot-corner guardians.

[illegible]

The boys think the Daffy Dodgers got much the better of it in both of their swaps. Burleigh Grimes plugged two infield holes by getting Lavagetto and English and picked up two first class southpaw prospects in Birkofer and Henshaw, all for one good pitcher and an infielder who set a league record in making errors at shortstop last season.

[illegible]

Downs Post May Go to B. C. Grad

Changes in management, amounting to a general reorganization, are now in process at the Suffolk Downs race track in East Boston. They will be announced sometime during the course of the coming week, according to President Charles F. Adams.

Adams and the other directors spent an entire afternoon in conference over the prospective changes.

"Should we decide to continue to function with a managing director," continues Adams, "his authority will not have the wide scope which has been the case in the past.

"There are many persons with large capital invested at Suffolk Downs. We have to function as a corporation. We can't delegate authority so easy to any one person.

Wilson is a heavy stockholder in Suffolk Downs and has turned in a fine job as managing director," he states.

VALENTI Gets Option on BOMBER

TO SHOW HERE IN SUMMER

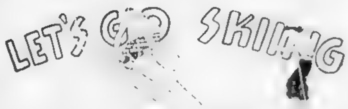
By SAM COHEN

Rip Valenti, matchmaker of the Goodwin A. C., returned from New York today with an option on Joe Louis' services for a Boston bout next summer, against any opponent he may select.

Promises Bout

Tickets for this show are now available and reservations may be made at the Goodwin A. C. downtown headquarters, 293 Washington street, room 33, telephone Capitol [illegible]. Despite the fact that this is a 12 round bout and the New England heavyweight championship is at stake, matchmaker Valenti has insisted upon a popular price scale of tickets.

Diamond Belters In Last Trials



Starting early Wednesday morning central and northern New England were greeted with the prospect of the first major snow fall of the season. Later in the day with a shift in the wind and an increase in temperature the snow became heavy.

The latest reports from northern Vermont and New Hampshire, are that until late last night there were light flurries of snow with an expected drop in temperature and fair weather continuing until late Sunday afternoon when there is expected a snow storm of major proportions.

At the present time great caution should be exercised unless the skier is an expert as few trails are open and necessitates the keeping of the skis under control at all times. The Mt. Mansfield and Pinkham Notch areas should provide good skiing for the week end.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

PINKHAM NOTCH—15 inches of new snow over crusted base; temperature 20 above, clearing, with skiing possible from the Half Way House nearly to the base.

VERMONT

MASSACHUSETTS

Mahoney Forces Hold Ruling Hand

MOVE TO RETAIN METRIC SYSTEM

Houston, Tex., Dec. 5 (AP)—After two days devoted to sidetracking Olympic controversies, shadow boxing for political control, and wrestling with its 1937 sports program, delegates to the 48th convention of the Amateur Athletic Union faced a final, sharp warning today against a "divided house" from President Avery Brundage of Chicago.

[illegible]

"Once it is made the tool of some individual group or is used to serve political ambitions for personal profit or for any other purpose alien to the objects as set forth in its constitution it will wither and [illegible]."

Tighten Lines

1—Tightening of opposing lines in the contest between Jeremiah T. Mahoney and Major Patrick J. Walsh, two New York lawyers, for the presidency with indications the Mahoney forces were holding their pre-convention lead and that the Brundage-led group would lose control of the A. A. U. simultaneously with the retirement of their leader.

2—Committee recommendations to retain the metric system of measurement for national A. A. U. track and field championships despite widespread dissatisfaction with this international standard. The proposal, however, involved "local option" for district or sectional meets which would have a choice between the metric or yardage system.

3—A major setback for the "Olympic tax" idea as a consequence of the track and field committee's rejection of the administration scheme to collect five cents per admission on all A. A. U. events as long-term means of building up funds for America's Olympic teams. The wrestling committee favored such a tax on all admissions of [illegible] cents or over. Brundage's report suggested collecting five cents for all admissions up to 50 ten cents on all tickets of bigger value.

4—A proposal by Lorrin Andrews of Los Angeles, president of the Southern Pacific Association, to [illegible] by naming a committee to study the situation, eliminate [illegible] complications and recommend a clarified amateur rule for adoption at the 1937 convention.

SHOE & LEATHER

Industry IS IN HEALTHY Condition

By HUGH E. BRADSHAW

From two widely varied sources today evidence of the present healthy condition of the shoe and leather industry is obtained. In New England particularly great progress has been made during 1936.

During October shoe production for the northeast section was the highest ever for the month, according to the current report of the New England Shoe & Leather Association.

At the same time this section led the country in shoe production for the sixth consecutive month, the association points out. As the figures are based on the reports of the U. S. Bureau of Census and bear the stamp of official authenticity. So much for obsequies to this industry. Considering shoe and leather industry among professional analysts of business trends there is much optimism. From such a service as Poor's we are supplied with a cheering review of conditions during 1936 and a most hopeful preview of 1937.

The big statistical service after analyzing conditions in the industry sees good reason to anticipate higher retail shoe prices. In fact, Poor's flatly states that an advance appears imminent. Tanners are viewed by the same source as the laggards in participating in the improvement. Theoretically they should be reaping inventory profits from the rise in hides. But despite persistent strength in raw stock markets, which is seen as prompting to continue, tanners have not yet marked up leather on a proportionate basis. At present they are negotiating with the spring trade and results are expected to favor leather makers.

* * *

Notebook: A breakdown of the Census Bureau's figures by the New England Shoe and Leather Association shows that Massachusetts was topped by New York in production during October for the first time this year . . . However, the Bay State can boast of a higher relative gain for the month . . . As well as of a better ten-month record . . . For it leads all states over the period . . . And New York actually lost one per cent from 1935 levels. All of which develops the general thought that next year is promising to be one in which trading and investment commitments in the shoe and leather industry will prove quite profitable.

* * *

The general market policy recommended has over recent weeks must remain unchanged. After study of the erratic behavior of stock prices this week we can see no sound reason for increasing commitments, and the erratic action is sound reason for keeping 50 per cent liquid. At the same time, two of our favored groups, oils and aircrafts, are the real leaders, while the third, utilities, at least is stable. So until rains come forward we do not see why that part of funds in stocks should be expanded to include other groups.

* * *

Ticker Tiens: First National Stores is down to levels where it again attracts us for investment purposes . . . It may not be the fastest moving stock on the obard, but the reurn is most attractive and long-term appreciation seems assured . . . Douglas Aircraft again loks ready to take a front place in market proceedings . . . Given reasonable general conditions we expect a new high . . . As the charts show a very good rally base . . . A. M. Byers, after a long siege of doing nothing, is apparently ready to make up for lost time . . . This issue is an old speculative favorite with a slumbering following . . . Which would undoubtedly flock to the cause if given a half decent excuse.

Public Warned Against Bogus Stock Sellers

Ring up the stock fraud authorities or the nearest branch of the Better Business Bureau if a glib salesman calls on you claiming to represent Hearst Enterprises Incorporated or Hearst Consolidated Publications, Inc., and offering to sell Class "A" stock of Hearst Consolidated Publications, Inc.

The success of the public sale of $50,000,000 of this stock, paying 7 per cent dividends, has led high-pressure solicitors to impose on the public.

No salesmen are now employed by Hearst Consolidated Publications, Inc., or Hearst Enterprises Incorporated, to sell, trade in or switch any type of securities. The investing public is being given this warning for its own protection.

STOCK Prices RALLY

AIRCRAFTS STRONG

Baldwin gained more than a point to above 10 and American Locomotive, Westinghouse Air Brake and Pullman improved.

Houston and Consolidated Oil gained fractionally and Phillips Petroleum and Standard of N. J. moved moderately higher.

Boeing Airplane was up more than a point to a new peak for the year. Douglas Aircraft gained as much and United Aircraft slightly less.

U. S. Steel and Bethlehem were moderately higher. Small gains were chalked up by N. Y. Central, Southern Pacific, Atchison and Chesapeake & Ohio.

Current Topics

Those who have been trading with the utilities and equipments noted estimates that the principal power companies this year will have spent some $275,000,000 on expansion, compared with an outlay of $193,000,000 in 1935.

The boost in crude oil prices was expected to greatly improve earnings of numerous small concerns in this field which have been working on narrow profit margins. Due to heavy consumption, there was said to be little fear of over-production at this time.

Interest was shown in the report of the Association of American Railroads indicating the carriers in the first 10 months had an annual rate of return of 2.36 per cent on property investment.

Sterling was off ⅛ of a cent at $4.89⅝ in initial foreign exchange transactions, and the French franc was 96% of a cent lower at 4.65⅛ cents.

Business Regulation In 1937

New York, Dec. 5—In its weekly summary of the general business situation, the Standard Statistics Company, of New York, currently comments as follows:

"When Congress assembles next month, it will be confronted with an extensive list of legislative proposals to provide new forms of control and regulation over business.

"Many of these measures would, if actually enacted, exert an important influence upon the further progress of business recovery. Measures now under consideration range all the way from bills designed to attack the problem piecemeal—within the limits of constitutionality established by recent Supreme Court decisions—to proposals involving comprehensive modification of the Constitution itself.

"The Standard Statistics Company recently has conducted a comprehensive survey of the various legislative proposals likely to receive early consideration. Its conclusions are briefly summarized as follows:

"Numerous proposals for regulatory legislation are likely to receive Administration approval, but it is improbable that these will exert a major retarding effect during 1937 on the prospective rise in business volumes.

"Such enactments are likely to be on a piecemeal basis rather than in any such comprehensive form as the original NRA, and should have only minor effects on costs and profit margins.

"The question of a specific amendment to the Constitution to permit broader regulation of wages and working conditions may well be held in abeyance, although the question is under active discussion, and 1937 may offer a favorable opportunity for its presentation to the state legislatures for ratification.

"Nevertheless, the trend continues definitely in the direction of permanent policies of federal regulation and control, and the Administration is likely to approve, even though it does not directly sponsor, a number of such proposals next year."

N. E. Power Output Up

The primary production in kilowatt hours for New England Power Association for the week ended Nov. 28, 1936, showed a gain of 14.5 per cent over the corresponding week of 1935.

Retail Advertising Up for Year

Chicago, Dec. 5—Retail advertising in newspapers for this year to November 21, is 51,443,832 lines ahead of the corresponding period of 1935, according to a study released today by Advertising Age, national advertising newspaper.

This data, based on total volume of retail newspaper advertising in 67 major cities, shows a total of 818,153,171 lines of retail display for this year against 767,443,832 lines for the like period of 1935, a gain of 6.6 per cent. This is the largest gain recorded at any time this year and reflects the good effect of the many extra dividend an bonus payments recently paid or declared, on business generally, the paper says.

For the seven-day period ended November 21, retail advertising volume amounted to 21,552,950 lines against 19,285,929 lines for the corresponding week of 1935, a gain of 11.8 per cent. This is the fourth largest weekly gain in 1936.

WORLD Markets LOWER

KING'S AFFAIR OVERSHADOWS

By LES'IE GOULD
International News Service Financial Editor

New York, Dec. 5 (INS—The Simpson affair—which means King Edward's romance and the British cabinet crisis revolving around it—has overshadowed everything else this week and brought about a lower trend in the stock markets of the world.

As incredible as it may seem, this love affair of the British King has projected the gravest crisis in Great Britain in years. On its solution hinges the future of the empire.

While it continues, there is bound to be uncertainty in finance. London is still the world financial center, although this may be the beginning of the end of that reign, with the United States assuming a role which is rightfully its own.

The stock market has followed an irregular pattern all week, with the general price average on only one day—Thursday—finishing behind a plus sign. The utilities were unable to do even that—they were lower every session.

The Simpson case did not "break" as a market factor until Wednesday. Prior to that stocks had been unsettled by the general European situation centering around Spain and prospects of a change in the capital gains tax.

Since the Simpson case developed almost overnight into a British Empire crisis, with international repercussions, the Spanish war has been forgotten. On Wednesday the markets suffered their sharpest decline, chiefly under the burden of foreign selling.

There was a recovery on Thursday, but on Friday the list again was unsettled with minus outnumbering the plus.

Range Shown

High	Low	Last	Net chg
Industrial Stocks
184.03	179.66	180.97	— 2.25
Railroad Stocks
55.75	54.18	54.48	— 1.35
Utility Stocks
36.12	35.06	34.15	— 1.71
40 Bonds
105.83	104.61	105.83	+ 0.16

The flow of extra, increased and special dividends continued unabated. Otis Steel paid $4.25 on its first preferred stock, Aluminum Co. of America of the Mellons $7.25 on preferred arrears, General Public Service $10 on arrears on the 6 per cent stock and $9.16 on the 5½ per cent, Ward Baking $2.25 on the preferred, Yellow Truck $35 on the preferred arrears, which amounted to $61.25, the payment being the first in 10 years; American Locomotive $5 on accumulations and American Metals $31.50 clearing up back dividends.

In addition to these payments of back dividends, there were actions by Standard Oil of Ohio of $1.25 special, National Distillers, 75 cents extra, Ingersoll Rand, $4 extra, Lehman Corp., The Investment Trust, $1.50 extra, Briggs Manufacturing, $1, Kelvinator, 50 cents, Peoples Drug, $1.75 extra, and Wrigley, 25 cents special.

Next week will probably wind up the dividend business for this year. Bethlehem Steel's and Paramount's meetings promise to be the high spots.

Business news continues highly favorable. In the retail division, all Christmas records are on the way to being broken. The stores are already jammed and indications are there will be shortages of much of the holiday merchandise.

COMMERCIAL Loans Up in N. Y.

At the season when a declining trend is expected, "other loans" in New York city gained $7,000,000 to $1,451,000,000 the week ended December 2, after a $14,000,000 decline here and $7,000,000 in 100 other cities last week.

New York city member banks increased holdings of direct United States government securities $33,000,000, the amount by which they reduced them the previous week. Brokers loans were at $1,000,000 after a sizable gain a week ago and total loans and investments were up $55,000,000.

Income Higher

Reports of 114 class 1 railways to ICC show aggregate net income of $26,406,016, after taxes and charges, for September, against $13,634,976 in September, 1935. For nine months it was $42,789,982 against net loss of $66,180,281 a year before.

FAR-REACHING

National LABOR BOARD Decision

By MERRYLE STANLEY RUKEYSER
Copyright, 1936, by Universal Service

New York, Dec. 5 (US)—The human implications of the recent decision of the National Labor Relations Board in the International Harvester Company case are far reaching indeed.

The board has ordered the company to disestablish its long established industrial council plan as an agency for employe representation.

The decision is of more than routine significance because it turns thumbs down on a mode of operations which outside students have long considered a model of superior employer-employe relationships.

The decision is all the more remarkable in that the board recognized that the company had conferred substantial benefits on its employes, including an athletic association, its educational promotion of the Credit Union plan, the adoption of a vacation plan, a pension plan, safety measures and other service devices.

The decision is noteworthy also because it upheld the contentions of an outside union, which apparently had been unable to get to first base with the employes. Charges were brought against the Fort Wayne plant of the company a year ago by Local 57, International Union, United Automobile Workers of America.

According to an official statement by the board, the union had in March, 1935, only 300 members among the then 1300 production employes. Moreover, it was officially stated that by the time the board hearing in the case in May, 1936, the union had lost 200 of its 300 members, although by that time also the production workers had increased to 2500.

Apart from technicalities, the crime of the management seems to have been to have kept their employes so contented that they were not good prospects for outside union organizers. This comment is made by one who believes that well conducted trades unions serve a useful function in the economic scheme of things.

* * *

Starting back in 1919, long before NRA, the Harvester management sought to apply intelligence and the spirit of progressivism to industrial relationships. It seemingly made a striking success of this program, which at this belated date is now held to be illegal under the terms of the new Wagner national labor relations act.

The implications of the decision are that forward looking voluntary improvement of employe-employer conditions are to be frowned upon, and that the only acceptable way to effect agreements is in the trenches of class warfare.

* * *

Capable management cannot ignore the human element in waiting, including until driven reluctantly to make concessions by outside agencies.

The very essence of manufacturing is the use of man power, in conjunction with machinery, in order to produce goods.

It is destructive to imply that management should always remain static in regard to its workers until the latter through organization force changes.

As a matter of fact it has been profitable as well as humane voluntarily to give men added wage incentives and generally happier working conditions.

To have shirked responsibility for social invention, to have turned away from the obligation through perpetual research and study to improve working conditions, would have been a backward step on the part of management.

Chiselers and incompetents on the managerial side have sidestepped such responsibilities, and socially minded observers have berated them, citing the superior performance of enlightened companies such as International Harvester.

* * *

This structure is now kicked over on the theoretical ground that it provided "only the shadow, not the substance, of collective bargaining." This very council passed muster, subject to minor modifications, with the automobile labor board, appointed by the president, under the NRA.

The significance of the decision is to discourage agencies for improving the situation of workers unless they are of the conventional, approved, trades union pattern. With the schism on between two major groups in the A. F. of L. and with one group of unionists "sporting the label of a former company union," the whole picture becomes extremely perplexing.

Industrial Rayon

Industrial Rayon Corporation declared a dividend of 50 cents and one of 42 cents, payable January 2 and December 24, respectively, both to stock of record December 14. On October 1 the regular quarterly dividend of 42 cents was paid.

U. S. Investments HUGE

IN LATIN AMERICA

By SAMUEL SHULSKY
International News Service Financial Writer

New York, Dec. 5—President Roosevelt's peace mission to South America has once again focussed the attention of financial interests on the huge investments of the United States in Latin America.

For the first time in several years hopes for recovery of a good portion of the one and a half billions of dollars invested in Central and South America are running high.

The successful start made on the refunding of Argentina's $240,000,000 of bonds held here and the general improvement in economic conditions of the countries spurred by the world-wide rise in commodity prices are two factors taken as indications of better times ahead for Central and South America and their creditors.

* * *

At the present nearly 1¼ billions of the 1½ billions outstanding are in default as to principal or interest on both.

Brazil has the greatest amount of dollar bonds in default with a total of $348,629,800 outstanding, all of which have omitted either interest or sinking fund payments. Under the agreement of Feb. 5, 1934 the obligations are divided into eight categories with payments ranging from 100 per cent on the U. S. of Brazil liens to nothing on the last group, which includes state bonds of Alagoas, Amazonas, Bahia and the city of Manaos, getting nothing.

Chile is another of the large debtors to this country. It has $263,634,000 bonds outstanding, all of which are in default as to interest. It has offered to pay interest of less than ½ per cent and a sinking fund payment of the same amount, but the interest offer was refused.

* * *

Colombia is next with $143,630,900 bonds outstanding, all in default of interest. It has made no offer, although investment experts here hope for action early next year, based on the country's economic gains.

Peru's $91,286,000 bonds are in default on interest. In its budget for this year the nation appropriated approximately $500,000 for interest payments, which do not demand surrender of the holders' contract rights, and a like amount for retirement of the bonds in the open market. Beyond the appropriation, however, there has been no action.

* * *

Uruguay, with $62,367,000, its entire dollar amount, in default as to interest, is making probably the largest payment of the group, 3½ per cent. Costa Rica is likewise in complete default on its $8,781,000 outstanding.

Comments of Brokers

We would continue conservative trading policies for the time being but would be willing to follow strength in the rails or utilities at this point.—J. B. Wilson, Josephthal & Co.

We still do not see any evidence of acute weakness as yet and we would continue to hold stocks recently purchased, with with the idea that a genuine rally will soon develop.—Berry Grant, Hornblower & Weeks.

Certainly there is nothing in the situation at home to justify any change in a constructive attitude toward the market.—F. H. Richardson, Southgate & Co.

I would hold trading commitments made on weakness Friday, but would be inclined to protect positions in cases of active stocks by use of stops just under their post-election lows.—H. D. Comer, Paine, Webber & Co.

Offsetting this favorable outlook for domestic conditions are the uncertainties abroad which naturally instil some spirit of doubt and caution among operators in markets on both sides of the water.—Elmer H. Bright & Co.

The suggestion has been made more than once in this letter recently, and in market comments from numerous other sources, that vulnerable positions might be accumulating in many low-priced issues and that it would be good policy to confine speculation to stocks for which there is reason to expect steady investment demand.—G. M. P. Murphy & Co.

A cautious selection of highest grade, dividend paying common stocks is still in order.—Robert H. Lee & Co.

While the business promise for next year remains unchanged, it should not influence any unloading of important long pull positions so that any correction should be regarded as a temporary interruption of the bull market.—J. P. Mahez-Shields & Co.

LEWIS HANEY SAYS

Labor Bonus Payments MADE TO FORESTALL Red Inspired Demands

By LEWIS HANEY
(Professor of Economics, New York University)

New York, Dec. 5—From a group of Los Angeles readers, I get the following series of questions:

(1) What is the "easy money policy"?

This policy is one of controlling bank credit by government action, usually through "open market operations" or direct control over bank loans and investments. It is designed to force "money rates" down and maintain them at a low level.

The purpose or intent is probably an essential part of the definition. This may be (1) to stimulate business by forcing savers to spend and by encouraging borrowing, (2) to enable the government to run on the basis of borrowing and deficits, and (3) to eliminate private saving and weaken private capital.

(2) What is the usual outcome of the easy money policy?

About all one can say is that, in the past, laws to force low interest rates have been evaded and have probably made actual rates higher than otherwise.

Loose policies in making loans have resulted in bankruptcies. Artificial stimulants administered to business by politicians have either failed or caused temporary booms and collapses.

It is pertinent to add that we know what happens to individuals who borrow and do not save. They become a burden on others.

(3) Has it been tried in England or elsewhere?

Since her bankruptcy, when she suspended the gold standard, England has been the leader in a sort of easy money policy.

England's policy, however, differs essentially from ours in that she balances her budget. She also maintains a free and open gold market. Her banking system is sounder than ours.

Even so, this policy has contributed to cause an unhealthy "new era" boom in England. It will collapse eventually.

(4) What are the advantages and disadvantages?

If carefully safeguarded and administered by non-political authority, it might be wisely timed and be used temporarily to stimulate a business recovery when conditions were ripe for one.

If there were a "money trust" or abuse of financial power by private organizations, the easy money policy might be used as part of a scheme to break it up.

But these hypothetical advantages are all I can see and they are improbabilities. The fundamental mistake of the policy is to suppose that capital (plant, equipment and raw materials) can be maintained without saving, or that there can be any saving unless individuals do it.

It is the chief basis of public debt, the unbalanced budget, unstable "managed currency" and wild government experiments. This is true because it's chief use is to enable the government to float and carry a bigger burden of debt.

(5) How do you account for the large bonus and wage payments, if the New Deal has hindered business?

Much of the dividend payment is unwise. It is forced by the tax law. We may have to pay for this in the next depression.

More important than these points, however, is the fact that many businesses have at last made money in 1935, as a result of the long-postponed industrial replacement demand for equipment.

To this factor has been added a world-wide demand for materials and equipment for armament purposes. Our politicians have had nothing to do with these things.

Finally, note that these bonuses, etc., are (1) paid in cheapened dollars, and are (2) offset by our public debt. They are a manifestation of inflation and the easy money policy—don't save, buy now—pay later (!)

For every extra dollar of bonus, there is an extra dollar of government debt.

Wall Street Sidelights

New York, Dec. 5—Dropping fares along with the railroads, motor bus lines are demonstrating that they are able to expand their patronage despite increased attractiveness of rail rates.

Analysis by bus transportation shows bus passenger revenues per road mile are now at their peak. Intercity operations for the first three-quarters of 1936 showed a 3 per cent gain over the like 1935 period. Higher operating cost was a penalty of dropping fares to keep an advantage over rail rate reductions put into effect last June. Operating expense per bus in the first nine months of 1936 showed a rise of 7.24 over 1935 in intercity operations.

* * *

Hint Bankruptcy Law Revisions

Belief that Section 77 of the bankruptcy laws may be modified at the coming session of Congress to the advantage of railroads undergoing reorganization is generating market strength among many low-priced rail issues. Traders believe Jesse Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, is aroused over the tangled affairs of some of the roads seeking to readjust their capital structures, and has voiced the opinion that there should be some changes in the bankruptcy laws to facilitate the readjustments. With as powerful a sponsor as Mr. Jones, railroad circles feel changes in the laws may be affected with the resultant speeding up of carrier capital revisions now pending in the Federal Courts.

Niagara Hudson to Refund Debt

A gigantic refunding program calculated to involve an estimated saving of between $3,500,000 and $4,000,000 annually in fixed charges is being studied by the Niagara Hudson Power Corp., according to well-founded reports. Subsidiaries of the system have outstanding nearly $220,000,000 of bonds and more than $220,000,000 of preferred shares. The interest coupons on the bonds range between 4½ to 5 per cent, with the average at 4.90 per cent. The preferred shares carry dividends from 5 per cent to 8 per cent, with an average of 6⅓ per cent. Practically all these issues, it is believed, will be refinanced or exchanged into lower rate securities under the contemplated program. The operation may require elimination of certain of the intermediate holding companies and reduction in the number of operating units to possibly five instead of 20 as at present.

Gold Imports and the Credit Base

Banking authorities are keenly interested as to the course Washington is likely to pursue in offsetting effects of gold imports on the credit structure. That some plan will be developed out of the present study into the subject of foreign investments in American securities and gold and exchange is regarded a foregone conclusion in informed quarters. Some observers consider the British method of borrowing the funds required for the equalization fund an ideal example for this country to copy. In that way the money would first be taken out of the market and gold subsequently obtained in exchange control operations by the fund would simply be a "wash." The American stabilization fund now consists of the profit arising out of gold revaluation.

Is Traffic of United Air Lines a Guide?

The report of United Air Lines of passenger traffic in November showing 19,000 revenue passengers carried compared with 11,009 in the same month of last year was accepted as an indication that the traffic of other air transport units would show similar increases. Air passenger traffic this year has been consistently heavier than in 1935, so that the gain in November was not a surprise. In addition to this factor, the weather last month was better for flying than the corresponding month of 1935. Air express shipments are showing substantial increases also.

HOLDS Sweringen SEAT

FITZPATRICK APPOINTED

The slender, white-haired bachelor held the seat formerly occupied by the late O. P. Van Sweringen, who died early last week at the age of 57.

Fitzpatrick's appointment as president of Mid-America Corporation was announced last night in a joint statement by George A. Ball and George A. Tomlinson, midwestern capitalists who control the top holding company of the far-flung rail and real estate system.

"We shall expect him to co-ordinate even more closely the wide-spread activities of these varied interests, although realizing fully the great loss the properties have sustained i nthe passing of both the Messrs. Van Sweringen," Ball and Tomlinson said.

* * *

(1)—Reorganization of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, the 12,000-mile final link of the nearly 30,000-mile rail system acquired by the Van Sweringens.

In addition to these, a Senate committee is scheduled to begin Monday an inquiry into the growth of the Van Sweringen Railway Holding Company system. The company already has summoned Ball, Tomlinson, J. P. Murphy, secretary of Mid-America, and Thomas H. Jones, attorney.

Eastern railroad circles also speculated on whether a portion of the Bal-Tomlinson statement indicated that they were determined to carry out the Van Sweringen dream of creating a fourth coast-to-coast rail link.

The statement said Fitzpatrick "took a leading part with the Messrs. Van Sweringen in the so-called 'four-party' conferences which resulted in the general accord for four balanced railroad systems in the eastern region, one of which is to be created from the properties represented in mid-America."

The Van Sweringen lines were extended to Denver by acquisition of Missouri Pacific in 1930. Depression effects, however, ended any immediate further efforts of the bachelor brothers to stretch their rail network to the West Coast.

The new rail head maintains a residence in Huntington, W. Va., but has spent most of his time here. Before accepting the vice-presidency of the C. & O. in 1923 he was West Virginia counsel for the railroad.

His friends call him "Fitz." He writes and speaks simply and has a quiet sense of humor. He was Democratic national committeeman from West Virginia for eight years.

Washington Notebook

Washington, Dec. 5 (AP)—The commerce department reports that seasonally adjusted indexes of rural retail sales reached an all-time high in the south during October and a new peak since 1929 in the east and middle west. Based on 1923-25 as 100, the index stood at 163.6 in the south last month, at 120.2 in the east, 116.2 in the middle west and 126.8 in the far west.

Exports of copper during October totaled $5,365,000, the commerce department says, advancing $939,000 over September. The increase was due largely to marked upturns in exports of refined copper in ingots and bars.

The Commerce Department is advised that new peak in automobile production in Great Britain was attained during the year ended September 30. For the year, production of private cars and taxicabs totaled 353,838, compared with 311,544 in the previous year, an increase of 42,294.

Products of the pencil and crayon industry last year were valued at $19,999,000, the census bureau reports, an increase of 38.9 per cent over 1933, when the last census was taken. Wages totaled $4,235,000 in 1935, an increase of 33.8 per cent, and wage earners numbered 5182, an advance of 28 per cent.

Advices to the commerce department from business representatives in foreign countries include—Belgium, flax exports increase; Poland, cotton imports simplified; Germany, import duty and internal tax raised on motor fuels.

YOUR ADVENTURE

Tell About It---Win Cash Prize

JOEL McCREA JEAN ARTHUR

Joel McCrea and Jean Arthur, who are featured in the motion picture play "Adventure in Manhattan." Prizes are to be awarded for letters detailing your "Adventure in Manhattan."

Can you use a little extra cash for Christmas?

If so, here is an opportunity for you to share in the list of cash prizes and guest theater tickets to be distributed to Boston Evening American readers.

Forty-six prizes will be awarded for the best letters submitted on:

"My Adventure in Manhattan!"

The contest is sponsored by the Boston Evening American and Loew's State and Orpheum Theatres and was inspired by Columbia's newest and thrilling picture entitled, "Adventure in Manhattan," starring Jean Arthur and Joel McCrea and opening at the State and Orpheum next Thursday, December 10.

COLORFUL MEMORIES

This title surely must recall many colorful memories to Boston American readers, and for that reason you are invited to send in your letter, explaining in not more than 100 words your adventure in Manhattan.

Write or type your letter on one side of the paper and be sure to watch your spelling. Neatness will count in your favor. You may recount any thrilling, exciting or pleasant happening you experienced during your visit to the metropolis.

Jean Arthur's outstanding recollection is the time she was appearing in a play. One night before a crowded house, in the course of the play, she sat down on a chair, only to discover it was on the verge of collapse.

SAVES SELF A FALL.

Jumping quickly to her feet, she saved herself an embarrassing fall, but another actress entered the stage to sit on the same chair. Jean became panicky, forgot the play, the audience.

"Don't sit down there, Milly!" she shouted. "That chair's broken!"

The audience roared, and it was several moments before the play could be resumed.

Address your letter to the "Adventure in Manhattan" contest editor, Boston Evening American, 5 Winthrop square, Boston, Mass. This contest closes on next Thursday, December 10, and letters bearing postmark later than Friday midnight, December 11, will be accepted.

Here is the list of prizes: For the best letter, $20; for second best, $10; $5 each for third and fourth; $3 for fifth, $2 for sixth and $1 each for the following five. For the next 35 selected by the judges, each will receive a pair of guest theater tickets for Loew's State or Orpheum Theater.

The President Weeps For His Friend

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S unrestrained demonstration of affection for the faithful Gus Gennerich, whose death cast a pall over the South American tour of the Chief Executive, testifies to the humanity characteristic of a great leader.

But in his devotion to the President whose life was so often in his hands, he was important enough to Mr. Roosevelt that the tears of the most idolized living American were shed for him.

The capacity for accepting an humble associate so completely in his home and heart endears Mr. Roosevelt further in the affections of his countrymen.

Radio Signals From Mars?

HARVARD astronomers are tuning in on radio signals reported coming to the earth from the direction of the Milky Way.

Here is fuel for the wildest imagination. Supposing Mars picks up our signals and we theirs, shall we be able to understand each other? And if we do, shall we be teachers or pupils?

Again no one knows. Yet, strangely, remedies for the wars, hatreds and ignorance that oppress us may be not in ourselves, as we have supposed, but in the counsel of our cousins on planets millions of miles away.

Reprisals Harm Innocent

THE INJUSTICE that always attends the practice of reprisals in any quarrel has been shown by the plight of the French vessel Champlain.

American workers refused to unload the cargo of the Champlain because French workers earlier declined to discharge the cargo of an American ship.

But the sacrifice thus imposed upon shippers, manufacturers and other workers innocent of offense to any of the warring groups is severe.

It is difficult to ascribe fault to anyone in connection with this incident, but it is proper to suggest that controversy should be tempered with reason.

Encourage Your Children

THE Boston Evening American's Roosevelt Inauguration Tour Competition for high school students is proving one of the most interesting events of its kind ever conducted in Massachusetts.

Communications from superintendents, principals and teachers throughout the state indicate more than ten thousand students will answer the historical questions that are asked.

The winners, ten boys and ten girls, will be guests at the President's second inauguration and will enjoy two glorious days in the national capital.

Parents should encourage their children to compete for the trips to Washington. To win one is to achieve a great honor.

Mail Early and Shop Early

POSTMASTER PETER F. TAGUE has appealed to the public to get Christmas packages in the mails at the earliest possible date.

This is a reasonable request and everyone should try to co-operate. Between now and December 25 more than sixty million letters, cards and gifts will be handled in the Boston postoffice. It will be a tremendous task.

It is also well to shop early, for that enables the buyer to have a wide selection of gifts and removes him from the bedlam of the last-minute rush.

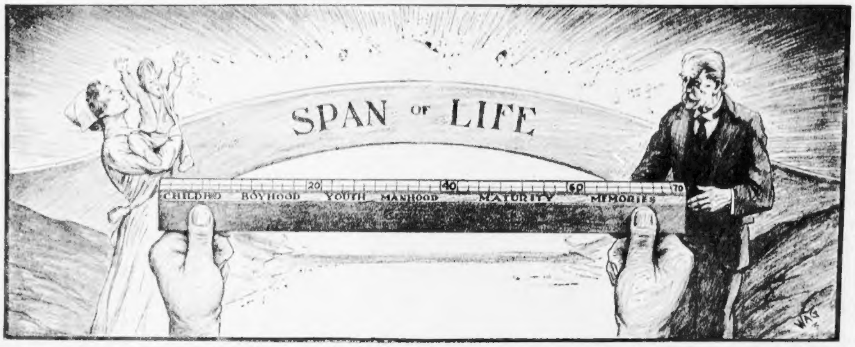
Security Act Blanks Due

UNITED STATES Treasury regulations require all persons affected by the Social Security Act to have their application blanks filled and in the mails addressed to their local postmasters by midnight tonight.

Applicants are advised to answer all questions correctly, with careful attention to birth dates, signatures and addresses.

An error now may prove expensive years hence when today's contributor, having reached the age of 65, becomes the pension recipient.

So Short a Span, So Quickly Traveled



THIS is life's short span, with infancy and feebleness at one end, old age and the grave at the other; a short story of six chapters: infancy, boyhood, youth, manhood, maturity, memories.

In childhood, time moves slowly, every minute exciting, every hour a life in itself. Every bed-time and getting-up time is important, each with its different reluctance: "MUST I go to bed—MUST I get up?" As with the child put to bed against its will and aroused against its will, so it is with the whole of life. Man comes into the world with suffering, weeping and leaves with regret: "What! Must I go already?"

As we travel the short span, time and the years fly by, more and more swiftly—like a train starting from the station, so slowly at first, everything along the track distinct, visible, important. The train moves more and more rapidly, trees, houses, telegraph poles fly past the window—so with human life. The old man at the far end of the span remembers clearly the years, months, even the days of boyhood, and he has only an indistinct memory of last week.

Because it IS short, man must work harder.

To the young, this picture means little; they hardly believe that life will ever end or that some day the sun will sink, never to rise again for them, on this earth.

To the old, youth quite naturally considers them not important. The old represent an audience leaving the theater, some moving slowly, some rapidly, all of little consequence. They have had their day, they have "seen the show."

Men of mature minds, with good judgment, wasted for lack of suitable employment. History's most admirable work is associated largely with the names of those past middle life. Blake, a great English admiral who never went to sea on a fighting ship until past fifty, conquered the Dutch for England. Goethe finished the second part of his "Faust" at 72 years of age. Voltaire dominated Paris, France, and all Europe, when past eighty. Michaelangelo, the great Italian, created admirable works of genius when past eighty; and Titian, another Italian, was still at work when the plague ended his life in his ninety-ninth year.

The French have a saying that the rest of the world accepts and repeats too readily: Si jeunesse savait, si viellesse pouvait—"if youth KNEW, if only age COULD."

Youth, it is true, is often enthusiastic, ardent, energetic, but lacking in knowledge; and old age too often lacks the energy and courage to use the knowledge that it has accumulated.

But youth can know, if it will study and think; and age can accomplish important work if it will refuse to be frightened by gray hairs and years gone by.

Youth did not keep Alexander the Great from conquering the world in his early twenties; old age did not keep Clemenceau and Lloyd George from bringing victory to the Allies, doing, in spite of years, the work that younger men could not do.

But generalities about youth and old age, the cradle and the grave, are less important than these questions for each of us: "WHAT CAN I DO WITH THIS SPAN OF LIFE? HOW CAN I MAKE EVERY DAY AND HOUR COUNT? HOW CAN I, WITH ENERGY AND HARD WORK, ATONE FOR MY SHORT-COMINGS? HOW CAN I MAKE THE BEST POSSIBLE USE OF WHAT TALENT AND POWER I POSSESS?

The Technique of Diplomacy Grows Slicker as Germany Woos the English Nobility with Opera

German Ambassador Von Ribbentrop and frau . . . brought over these German opera singers to entertain . . . titled London ladies

Clever Hitler knows that England does not trust France, trusts Russia less. Clever Hitler has sent former champagne-salesman Ribbentrop to London as ambassador, with orders to woo English nobility to the side of Fascist Germany, away from radical France and Red Russia.

Part of the act is pictured above. Von Ribbentrop brought the Dresden Opera Company to London, which sang heavy Wagnerian music to titled English audiences in Covent Garden. Purpose was to paint a pretty picture of music-loving Germany in the minds of London's Mayfair society—among the "big shots" who decide London's foreign policy.

But though Germany's opera stars raise the roof with high and low C's, no opera music can drown out the hum of German factories, turning out bombs and speedy planes to drop the bombs. On foggy nights, jumpy, sweating British peers, responsible for the safety of their "tight little isle," seem to hear those German factories humming across the English Channel. Then they, like Hamlet, see "ghosts" of the last war.

Germany will find it difficult to woo a maiden who trembles from fear that the serenader's intentions are not exactly "honorable."

Human Side of the News -:- By Edwin C. Hill

The post-mortem operation in New York made in an effort to save the life of one of a "Siamese twins" brings to mind the fact that such cases are not as uncommon as one might imagine.

Within the past year at least half a dozen have been reported in the United States and in Europe. Only two weeks ago a Dr. McLaren of the British Health Service reported from East Africa a successful operation, severing two infants who had been born joined together.

It is popularly and erroneously believed that Phineas T. Barnum, the greatest showman of them all, first introduced the original Siamese twins to America and exhibited them in his circus. The facts are that the twins were famous long before they came under the management of Barnum and they were too high-toned to show themselves.

A Yankee, Coffin by name, captain of a sailing ship, discovered the Siamese twins in 1829 while they swam about his vessel near Bangkok. They were 18 years old at the time, were Chinese, not Siamese, and were joined together by a band of tissue at the chest.

The boys may have been commonplace to the neighbors in Siam but they were a gold mine in America. The good burghers of Boston, New York and points west and south paid out dollars by the hundreds of thousands to gaze on Chang and Eng. They already were a sensation when Barnum took them over for his American Museum.

UNITED IN DEATH

Chang and Eng became American citizens, taking the name of Bunker, and when they reached their early forties, they decided they had enough money and retired. They bought a plantation in North Carolina and married two daughters of a neighboring family. The Civil War took away their slaves and they were compelled to try a come-back which was a success only because Barnum sent them to England and announced, as a publicity stunt, that an operation was to be performed to separate them.

Back in retirement in North Carolina in 1874, Chang fought a cold, but finally succumbed to pneumonia. Eng, who appeared well and normal up to the time of Chang's death, died a few hours later. Children, grandchildren and great grandchildren of the Siamese twins are to be found today in the Carolinas and in the border states.

Next to Chang and Eng, the most publicized of recent Siamese twins were Josefa and Rose Blazek. Born in the Czechoslovakian area of Austro-Hungary, they were joined at the spine. They gathered a fortune in tours around the world and died in Chicago in 1922, at the age of forty-three. Permission was refused by a brother when surgeons urged an operation in an attempt to save Rosa.

Such operations date back one thousand years. The first recorded took place in 945 A. D. on two children of Armenian birth who had been exhibited in Constantinople. A German surgeon in 1866 saved the life of a twin by separating him from his mate upon the latter's death. The famous Hindu twins, Rodica and Doodica, were divided by an operation in Paris in 1902. Rodica, survived by Doodica, died of tuberculosis.

That's That -:- By Bruce Gustin

The goal of organized labor used to be a "living wage." John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers are demanding now "not a living wage but a SAVING wage." They define a "saving wage" as one "that would make it possible for the workers to lay up something against a rainy day." How much that is varies with individuals. One family can save on an income on which another always is in debt.

It's further proof we're not all alike.

In urging that more opportunities for employment be given men of 40 and over, President Roosevelt has not been preaching something different from what he practices. His personal bodyguard, Gus Gennerich, who died suddenly at Buenos Aires, was 55 and was 47 when he entered the President's service. Guarding the President is a job which not only requires the vigor, physical prowess and alertness commonly associated with youth but the sound judgment that comes with mature years. The age and value of man's services are not measured merely by the yardstick of his years.

Cincinnati, O., has decided that each automobile owner must have his car inspected twice a year. That will provide jobs for 36 inspectors and cost the motorist 50 cents for each inspection. Checking up on brakes and lights of motor vehicles is important. But human weaknesses, not mechanical defects are responsible for most traffic casualties. No examination has yet been devised which will detect the worst of these human weaknesses — carelessness. Therein lies the way to end accidents.

TOM PENDERGAST, Democratic boss of Missouri, who has built up one of the most potent political machines ever seen in this country, is "breaking in" his nephew, Jim Pendergast, to succeed him. The success or failure of this change in leadership will show whether the "boss" strength lies in his system of organization or in his own political genius. The leadership of an organization can be handed along. But the genius which can hold together, expand and control the forces incorporated in a political machine must be born in a man.

New York Day by Day

By O. O. McIntyre

New York, Dec. 5—Here I am all undressed and in bed at midnight and a big fire breaks out a block or so away! Hear those fire wagons clanging by! Boy, how I'd like to be at that back wheel of the long ladder wagon. You know, hatless, hair blowing and leaning way out rounding corners.

Or running up the ladder with flames licking at heel—it will be like some printer to make it "a heel"—while a spire reels red against the night sky. Rescuing lovely lady stuff. Reaching safety just as a giant wall swoons slowly over with a sickening crash.

Where in the name of Hohokus is that other sock? Oh, there you are! On top of the clock. I must have taken it off just as I started to wind it—the clock, I mean. The dreamy, puttery type. Never know just what I'll do next. Sometimes I start wandering and before I know it I'm over by the river. Or something.

Any person who leaves a nice warm room on a night like this even for a fire has a dash of Richard the Lion Hearted. A good time to open the season for my raccoon coat. Nothing so comforting for a lone red corpuscle as to wrap it up in a lot of fur. Just a corpuscle coddler.

My luck to reach the lines without a police card. If I had people around me who cared a fig for my welfare they would see I didn't go to a fire without that card. But who cares what happens to me? My job is to work my fingers to the bone to make others happy and whatever is left over is mine.

I mustn't start crying with so many neighbors probably going to the fire, too. I'll walk right through the police guard as though I had a card. I look like a newspaperman sometimes, side view. Here I go! What right has that cop to shove me around that way? I thought for a moment he had unhinged my neck. And then jeer: "Better hurry back to New Haven, Chester, you'll be late for chapel." That swipe was for the raccoon coat.

Don't look now, but in my hurry I forgot to put on my pants. But no matter, the good old raccoon hides all. Never in my life did I ever seem to be so in the way. Why can't they make out I'm not here? If it isn't a cop shoving me, it's a fireman or some private citizen who has an idea I have no right to be breathing.

I have as much right here as anyone. I'm a taxpayer—boy, am I a taxpayer!—and as good a citizen as the next fellow. For two cents, I'd get up on that fire plug and make a speech about my rights.

There goes my hat over my ears again. They take me for one of those "Hit him once, you get one cigar" fellows.

That cop has a kindly face. Probably a family man. I'll tell him how I forgot my police card. I'll clear my throat nicely. Sometimes my voice changes in the night air and takes off in a flutey uptake. Like Ed Wynn. The cop listens and just grunts "Yeah?" and goes on. I'd like to tell him how much he means in my life. In spades.

Anyway, I can lean against this abandoned doorway. Leaning is nice work if you can get it. A lean leaner. How's that for fast thinking? Without my pants. I'm beginning to chill a little around the ankles. And I wish that stray mutt would go on away and quit sniffing this coat.

Well, I finally—glug, glug, glug—got it. I mean a stray spurt of water. With all the people at this fire I'd be the only one in range. But did you see how I took it standing up? Any muggs who think they can knock me over with a squirt of water don't know their McIntyres.

There isn't one of us afraid to face even Niagara Falls. A lot of water dogs is what we are and the back of my hand to them. This raccoon coat is getting a bit aromatic. Wet up a bunch of raccoon hides and one thing you haven't got is a scent from Araby.

A bit gamey smelling, I'd say. Well, about the only thing for me to do is shake myself and go back to bed where I belong. One thing that has not happened to me is that I didn't catch on fire myself.

Isn't It So?

Small people envy every successful man his "luck." Great people admire him for his genius, his ability, his courage or his cleverness. Envy is an emotion they cannot feel.

Small people nurse their grudges as tenderly as they would nurse a sore finger. Great people would sooner go about with blisters on the hands or a pebble in the shoe than with a grudge like a canker-sore on the heart.
